U.S. Analysts Say Libya Has Told 'Hit' Squads to Suspend Operations

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON - After weeks of alarms about Libyan plans to issassinate President Reagan, U.S. inalysts with access in the latest np secret intelligence now say that dieged Libyan hit squads — two x them, with five members each - have suspended their operaions, at least temporarily. [A White House spokesman said riday that he had no comment on The Post's story, Reuters reported ... rom Washington.]

This has compounded the shadwy nature of the affair, confrontng the public in newspaper head-ines with diametrically opposite assertions by rival governments.

The administration and Col. Oadhafi have been hammering at each other in public almost all year, but the assassination plot is the most serious accusation that has been made against the Qadhafi

Sources say there is debate within the Reagan administration now as to why the alleged hit squads have become inactive and how long they will remain that way. One theory, the sources said, is that the publicity and U.S. denunciations gave Col. Qadhafi second thoughts about the squads.

High-level sources continued to insist that the assassination threat was real. Sources said that the U.S. government had hard evidence that two multinational squads had been trained in how to assassinate the president. East German terrorist experts helped in the training, they said.

The source for this evidence is a closely guarded secret within the Reagan administration. Unconfirmed press reports said the information came from an informant who was found to be credible. However, the information about the hit squads beyond their train-ing remains soft, sources said. The United States still does not know for sure whether any members ever. left Libya, for example, sources

"Once you learn about a threat to the president's life," a govern-ment specialist said, "you'd be crazy not to take it seriously. But we've had lots of them that nobody talked about."

The specialist's view on assassination attempts helps explain why two government officials with access to the same secret information can give different assessments without really contradicting each other in the technical sense.

For example, Howard H. Baker Jr., of Tennessee, the Senate majority leader, said on Dec. 16 that "the risk is diminished some." But David R. Gergen, the White House communications director, said in response to Mr. Baker's comment, "I know of no reason to believe the threat has diminished."

nongovernment publication specializing in Middle East events, The Middle East Policy Survey, reported recently that the CIA "now believes that Col. Qadhafi ordered the recall of the hit squad before it reached the United States."

Two congressional sources who heard CIA briefings on the Libyan hit squads said that the agency never asserted it had evidence that any of the suspected assassins had left Libya or any other launching point or that any had arrived in the United States. Senators and House members briefed by the CIA acknowledged that there were grounds to be concerned about the threat of assassi-nation. Several interviewed said they felt the portrayal of the threat had been exaggerated by both the media and the Reagan administration. One House member said the threat from Libyan hit squads did not seem to him to be any more serious than others the White House learns about on an almost Indications that the administration did take the threat seriously showed up in other highly visible ways, such as the posting of extra guards around Mr. Reagan and installing them as well for the first time on the third floor of the Pentagon ontside the office of Defense Secretary Caspar W. From Agency Dispatches TEL AVIV - Defense Minister Ariel Sharon was quoted Friday as saying larael was "forced to annex the Golan Heights" to counter U.S. plans in secure an Israeli withdrawal to its boundaries before June of 1967.

Mr. Sharon told the newspaper Yediot Aharonot that the United States "has decided to get Israel to pull back from lands captured in the 1967 Six-Day war, including the Golan Heights. The American pressure will be applied after our final withdrawal from Sinai next April and so we were forced to pass the annexation law to make it clear to Washington that we will not return to the indefensible 1967

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has announced a number of economic sanctions against the Polish government and said he had warned Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, that if the crack-down in Poland continued the United States would take "concrete political and economic mea-sures" against Moscow. In his sharpest condemnation of the events in Poland since the imposition of martial law on Dec. 13, Mr. Reagan said Wednesday in a televised address from the White House, "I want emphatically to state tonight that, if the outrages in Poland do not cease, we cannot and will not conduct business as usual with the perpetrators and those who aid and abet them."

"Make no mistake," he said. Their crime will cost them dearly in their future dealings with America and free peoples everywhere."

After three days of intensive discussions on what steps to take to try, to restore Poland to the relative freedom that existed before the crackdown, Mr. Reagan avoided some of the harsher measures sug-gested by many members of Congress, such as a ban on trade and economic ties with both Poland and the Soviet Union.

In fact, the only specific measures amounced Wednesday night were directed solely against the Polish government, which is headed by Gen. Wojciech Jarozelski, Nothing concrete was done against Moscow, although it received a sharp warning.

The Soviet Union, through its threats and pressures, deserves a major share of blame for the developments in Poland," Mr. Reagan

"So I have also sent a letter to President Brezhnev urging him to permit the restoration of basic rights in Poland as provided for in the Helsinki Final Act. In it, I informed him that, if this repression entinues, the United States will have no choice but to take further concrete political and economic measures affecting our relation-

The president said be had also written Gen. Jaruzelski informing him of the economic sanctions and "warned of the serious conse-quences if the Polish government continues to use violence against its populace."

"I have urged him to free those in arbitrary detention, to lift martial law and to restore the internationally recognized rights of the Polish people to free speech and association," Mr. Reagan said.

The steps taken against the Polish government, as outlined by Mr. Reagan, allowed the continued sending of food aid to the Polish people, who are said to be in desperate need of supplies for the long winter ahead. But the presiemphasized that such aid would continue through private American groups only so long as "we know that the Polish people themselves receive the food."

As outlined by Mr. Reagan, the sanctions against the Polish gov-ernment included these steps:

· Continuation of the suspension on U.S. government-spon-sored shipments of agricultural and dairy products to the Polish government until "absolute assurances" are received that distribution of these products is moni-tored and guaranteed by independent agencies.

· Halting the renewal of Poland's line of export credit insurance through the U.S. government-backed Export-Import Bank. [This reaffirmed a decision taken two weeks ago by the board of directors of the bank.

Reagan, Deflecting Potential Troubles, Keeps Republicans Buoyant for '82 Voting

New York Times Service NEW YORK — President Reagan has

ome to the end of a year of dramatic political change. He is facing scrious potential problems, but many politicians and voters say the difficulties do not yet appear to be punishing him or his party.

The strength of his position, and thus his opportunity to influence voting in 1982, comes through in interviews with politicians and voters, poll-takers and small-business men around the United From unemployment to budget delicits, from what some perceive as unfairness to the poor to growing antagonism from women and blacks, Mr. Reagan and the Republican Party almost appear to have stockpiled future troubles, some of them self-inflicted. Yet, according to the interviews, the president generally remains politically above the troubles and appears to be keeping his party buoyant as it approaches what may be the most important off-year election since 1934.

Opinion Research in Detroit, said: "Peo-ple really agree with him that cutting the federal budget is very important."

The Republican poll-taker added:
"Some of those things, like Social Security, or blacks, are noviously serious, nagging problems. But Reagan has, and has always had, the capacity in override those things, to be judged on bigger, broader criteria than [on] things that turn up in the poll numbers." up in the poll numbers."

Robert S. Strauss, the former Demo-cratic national chairman, said he was picking up a negative reaction to Mr. Reagan in his travels but called it "squishy." Mr. Strauss said, "The jury is still out on which way it's going to

Dissenting Opinion

Mr. Reagan benefits from support for our reason benefits from support the cutting federal spending and from public patience about what seem to be unitappy side effects of his program. Paul Hausmann, a small-business man in the Chicago suburbs, said he believed that his neighbors and customers were no longer demanding "instant gratification" from difficult policies. Gertrude Frey, a supporter in Northridge, Calif., said: "I think he's doing great. If we just hold with him we might make it."

A key exception to those who believe Mr. Reagan's problems remain in the future is Rep. Touy Coelho, a California Democrat and chairman of the House Democratic Campaign Committee. He Nancy Sinnott, executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee, disagreed. She predicted, with firmness equal to Rep. Coelho's, "We'll gain quite a few

Costteil Effect

It has become common in recent years for politicians to dismiss the importance of "coattails," the help the head of a ticket can give other candidates. But few Republicans argue that Mr. Reagan did not help them in 1980, when the Republicans picked up 33 House seats. Republicans say that Mr. Reagan has an exceptional opportunity to persuade voters that they should inflow his advice and vote Republican in 1982. Charles T. Manatt, the Democratic national chairman, conceded that there was an unusually close link between the president and the House election in 1982. "The connection is more direct, but both plus and minus," he said, adding that while voters might like Mr. Reagan's budget views they would punish him and his party for "the growing and deepening

"Business planners I talk with just can't believe this thing will turn around soon." he said.

Some national polls cast doubt on just how popular Mr. Reagan is now. The Gallup Poll, for example, has recorded approval levels almost identical with President Carter's four years ago and disapproval levels a bit higher. But that is not the way it sounds to politicians or to interviewers on doorsteps.

Faulted Differently

Popular criticism of Mr. Carter, as his first year ended, began to center on the word "incompetent," a fault with nn pos-itive side to it. But the negatives on Mr. Reagan sound more scattered, and when they deal with federal spending cuts that trouble an individual, the attitude is often mixed with general satisfaction over

For example, H.L. Patterson, a retired space shuttle engineer in Northridge, said of the president: "I think be's doing great. Somebody needs to dn something about all this spending."

Pressed on whether anything about Mr. Reagan troubled him, Mr. Patterson replied: "I don't think his advisers have given him a real good view as to how the situation is going to hit some of the real poor people."

Solidarity Is Greeted In Christmas Message

> By Henry Tanner New York Times Service

ROME - Pope John Paul II extended his Christmas blessings to the world in 42 languages on Friday and "cried out" to government leaders everywhere to change a state of affairs in which people were driven from work, locked in concentration camps, and deprived of the right of having a homeland

The main body of his "Urbi et Orbi" message — to the city and the world — which he delivered in Italian, made oo mention of Po-land but clearly reflected his anguish over the suffering of his countrymen.

When the pope stepped out onto the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica his face seemed dark and sad. It brightened as he saw that dozens of Polish flags and a white streamer with the red word "Solidarity" were waving in the back of the crowd of many tens of thousands that had come to St. Peter's

At the end of the main message, the pope said in Polish, "And now I address myself to you, my dear countrymen.

"I embrace every one and each of you, all of Poland, our common homeland, and those here in the square who represent Solidarity, and all those listening on the radio. f want these wishes to reach especially those who are suffering, who have been driven from their close ones, who have suffered depression and desperation.

Suzuki Backs Bigger Arms Budget

United Press late TOKYO - Premier Zenko Suzuki said Friday that he supports a substantial increase in 1982 military spending, apparently responding to U.S. calls for a stronger Japanese Army.

"I would like to secure a growth of defense spending comparable to that of last year," Mr. Suzuki said in a television interview. "Japan's defense budget grew about 8 percent in the 1970s, comparable to the growth in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization member countries. The growth for last year was 7.61 percent and f think we have to give a comparable growth to the defense budget next year."

Mr. Suzuki's remark indicated that the government might allocate a greater amount of money for military buildup than the $11.7 billion requested by the Defense Ministry in fiscal 1982, starting April 1. The Finance Ministry, however, wants to slash the military budget by $100 million — leaving a growth of 6.5 percent over the year. United Press Insernations

MILAN — Police in Milan have announced the arrest of three suspects in the hunt for U.S. Army Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, who was kidnapped from his home in Verona on Dec. 17.

The police said Thursday that one of the suspects was Pasqua Aurora Betti, 34, a former schoolmistress who is believed to have recently taken over command of the Milan cell of the Red Brigades terrorist organization. Miss Betti and another suspect, Flavio Amico, 26, were arrested Monday in a bar on the outskirts of Milan.

The police said they also seized "important" documents that the pair were carrying, but did not say what they contained. They did not disclose the name of the third suspect, who was taken for questioning but not immediately jailed. They refused to speculate on the links between the suspects and kidnapping on grounds that the investigation was still under way.

Revised Ecevit Sentence Held Illegal

From Agency Dispatches

ANKARA — The jail term being served by former Promier Bulent Ecevit was increased illegally by martial-law authorities, and his conviction has been quashed by the Military Court of Appeal, newspapers reported Friday. But it was not clear whether the four-month prison term would be reduced following the ruling Thursday.

No official word has been given about Mr. Ecevit's sentence, but his lawyers said they thought his jail term had been cut to two months. He was jailed Dec. 3 for three months for delying a military government decree banning politicians from making public statements. The sentence was later increased to four months on the ground that the offense was committed during the period of martial law.

Zia Vetoes Elections, Sets Up Council

United Press Inter ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq has dis-carded the idea of long-promised free elections and instead established a

350-member consultative council to help him rule Pakistan. Gen. Zia, who seized power in a military coup in 1977 and is chief martial-law administrator, announced formation of the new council in a nationwide television address Thursday. "It was felt that elections at present will be more harmful than beneficial," Gen. Zia said, adding that past experience showed "elections have given birth only to goods and chaos and confusion."

The council was an interim measure, the president said, and was not a substitute for parliament. But he did not explain how long it would last or if there would ever be free elections. The council's duties were largely unspecified and its decisions would not be binding on the president.

ANTELIAS, Lebanon — An explosion and fire ripped through a garage Thursday, damaging a hotel near Christian eastern Beirut where a Christmas party for children was under way. Police said two men were killed and four person were injured. Several children had minor burns

The Voice of Lebanon radio station, operated by the Christian Phalange Party, said the explosion was caused by a cylinder of liquefied gas. Police sources said the gas valve accidentally had been left open.
Initial reports said the explosion was caused by bombs in cars.

Rescuers, meanwhile, recovered the body of Iraqi Ambassador Abdel-Razzak Mohammed Lafta from the rubble of the blown-up embassy in western Beirut, a police spokesman said. The building was leveled by a bomb on Dec. 15. A police spokesman said three other bodies were dug out from the ruins, bringing to 41 the oumber of confirmed fatalities in the explosion. By Michael Oreskes

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Attorney General William French Smith has asked that a special prosecutor be appointed to investigate an allega-tion made against Raymond J. Do-

Mr. Donovan, 51, was said to bribe to a union official in 1977. when he was an executive of a con-struction company in New Jersey. Mr. Smith's request was sent

Wednesday to a special three-indge panel set up under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act. The act requires the Justice Department to conduct a preliminary investiga-tion of any allegation made against a high government official, and then refer the allegation to the spe-cial court if it warrants further in-

Mr. Donovan has denied the allegation, has called for the appointment of a special prosecutor and has denounced his accuser, Mario Montuoro, as a "damnable and contemptible hiar." Mr. Montuoro has been convicted of possession of drugs and weapons.

President Reagan had been told of the decision on Tuesday, Mr. DeCair said, and Mr. Donovan was informed Wednesday through his attorney. Mr. DeCair, who read the attorney general's statement, said that its language had been chosen intentionally.

A fend has broken out over idelines proposed by James Burnley, the new director of the volunteer service program, some-times called the domestic Peace Corps. The guidelines would ben VISTA volunteers from engaging in any type of protest demonstra-tion at any time.

Mr. Burnley, a Reagan appointee, wants to be sure that in the last 18 months of its life, VISTA — an acronym for Volunteers in Service to America - will no longer be known as a government program that helps teach poverty groups how to march on city hall or the welfare department.

But the American Civil Liberties Union has cried foul, not so much at the ban itself, but at the idea that it should be in effect roundthe clock, rather than just during working hours.

"Citizens don't give up their namese authorities in efforts to resolve the issue. At the last meeting in Hanoi in May, the Vietnamese identified three dead airmen who had been listed as missing in action. Their remains were later flown to the United States.

U.S. Embassy officials here said the U.S. government encouraged the efforts of private groups to investigate. But the officials said Hanoi was evidently more interested in publicizing inquiries into the effects of Agent Orange, partly to deflect U.S. accusations that the Vietnamese or their allies have been using chemical weapons against opponents in Cambodia and Laos.

In the veterans' statement, Robert O. Muller, the group's leader, said Mr. Thach "pledged to con-tinue working with us in a cooper-ative effort to help resolve the question of the American servicemen that are still listed as missing in action.

Mr. Muller, 36, a former Marine who was paralyzed from the waist down by a bullet wound, said the veterans and the Vietnamese agreed "in principle" that U.S. doctors and scientists would be allowed to visit beavily defoliated areas of Vietnam to carry out investigations into the effects of Agent Orange.

He said the group had conferred "a couple of times" with a Vietnamese committee investigating the consequences of toxic chemicals" and had met Hanoi's leading expert on the subject.

The veterans also toured the Litthe Flowers Hospital in Ho Chi Minh City, where they saw "gross-ly deformed" children, Mr. Muller said. He said some were deformed because of congenital birth defects and others were possibly victims of "toxic chemical exposure." Vietnamese authorities say some of the abnormalities were caused when expectant mothers became exposed to Agent Orange.

Mr. Mulier said the group visited an orphanage where children of American servicemen are boused, met a group of disabled soldiers who had fought for North Vietnam, visited the war museum in Hanoi and toured the mausoleum and former home of Ho Chi Minh.

'Left' Twist in DNA In Nature Reported

By Harold M. Schmeck Jr. New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Scientists have reported finding the first evidence in nature of a kind of genetic material called Z-DNA, or "left-handed" DNA, that may help turn on and off the hereditary message of genes. The discovery could provide dues to the origins of some discases, including cancer.

Law of the Sea for All

The United States temporarily withdrew from the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea last March so that the new administration could review the terms of this complex international treaty. The review has now been completed. In the next few weeks the president will be deciding whether the United States will return to the negotiations and, if so, on what terms.

The treaty establishes an international framework to govern mining of the rich mineral deposits found on the seabed. Since only a few countries possess the wealth and the technological capacity to mine in the deep scabed, the treaty creates an international anthority to mine these strategic minerals, along with private business, for the benefit of the developing countries.

It was dissatisfaction with the mining provisions that prompted the administration's review. Some objections were to technical features, such as a ceiling on mineral production, that affect private interests' ability to secure an adequate return on investment and their opportunity to compete on an equal footing with the proposed international enterprise. Other opposition was due to a distaste for the treaty's intervention in the traditional operations of the marketplace, and its spreading of political power in the treaty's governing council.

Some of the American concerns with the deep seabed mining provisions can be corrected through relatively minor amendments. Others can be dealt with through the commissions that will put the treaty into effect after it is signed. The remaining difficulties for American mining interests will be small

There's long been an uncertain quiver in the Voice of America. Even the name is a little suspect: a plural democracy does not speak with a single voice, much less through an official microphone. Yet today, sad to say, that hard-won trust is being put in jeopardy by over-eager

For months, Voice editors have been pressed to give a more polemical edge to their commentaries. Against the advice of VOA professionals, the administration is starting a new station, Radio Marti, to mount a propaganda counterattack against Fidel Castro. It is this background static that makes all the more damaging the recent resignation of Bernard Kamenske, director of the Voice's news division.

In quitting after 28 years, Kamenske is being loyally discreet about arguments with the new director, James Conkling, a former show business executive. But those quarrels are common knowledge at the station, as is Kamenske's importance in devising a charter that committed the Voice to "accurate, objective and comprehensive news."

As yet, fortunately, there have been no basic changes in the Voice's news format. But some dubious ideas are circulating, like calling Afghan guerrillas "freedom fighters" instead of "anti-government insurgents." Tags like that belong in editorials, not news re-

Coed Jogging

In considering higher education, you have to be careful when you try to decide what is waste and what is not. The American educational system is grounded in the notion that the society has an interest in broadening the horizons of its youth beyond the strict necessity of vocational competence. When, however, you find — as the General Accounting Office recently did - that large amounts of taxpayer money are being used to teach "coed jogging," archery and disco dance or to nurture a student through his 18th try at passing physical education - you might fairly conclude that some boundary of legiti-mate purpose had been transgressed. In the 20 institutions that the GAO studied, the agency found a disturbing pattern of low grades and poor attendance among students receiving aid and of lax monitoring by schools. The GAO does not claim that its sample is directly representative of the entire higher education establishment. It would be surprising, however, if the practices the agen-

Post-secondary education boomed during the last decade. The college-age population grew rapidly, and a far higher proportion of high school graduates sought further education. This is a healthy trend, but it brought with it a considerable lowering of academic standards. New institutions sprang up to take advantage of greatly expanded federal aid. Many older institutions, their endowcy found were not fairly widespread.

ments eroded by inflation and a generally poor investment climate, were also forced into the competition for student dollars. Federal aid was also important bait for recruiting minority students, to meet affirmative action goals and timetables.

This tended to reverse the old relationship between the school and the student. Schools used to set standards and dismiss students who failed to measure up to them. Now the students could set the standards, and if the schools failed to comply, the student could simply take his or her valued business to a more amenable competitor.

This undermining of standards may well accelerate as the schools enter a period of declining enrollments. Strengthened requirements for academic progress might help, but this is not an area where federal regulation can be relied on to prevent abuse. Tighter income eligibility standards are not a good idea; too many eager and able students at middle income levels are already unable to afford the advanced education that the country needs them to have. Correction must come from the schools themselves. To compete for the ever scarcer federal dollar, the higher education establishment must show that it can set and enforce reasonable standards of academic achievement, even if that means fewer students, fewer departments and fewer teachers.

Human Rights in Latin America

The issue of human rights in Latin America, and the priority that should be given to it, has been raised in an acute form by the series of resolutions proposed by the Inter-American Human Rights Commission. The Reagan administration is concerned with what it sees as the global threat of Communism and is inclined to turn a blind eye to violations of human rights by governments it regards as friendly. But such violations should be publicized, and meetings of the Organization of American States are the right occasions on which to do so.

Guatemala: Insurgency in Search of an Explanation

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON - There are two diametrically different ways of looking at the geopolitical state of play in Guatemala. One is Al Haig's, from the high ground of the State Department's 7th floor. The other comes from Father Fernando Lopez, a 47-year-old Catholic priest who fled Guatemala last year when his name showed up on the published death lists of government "paramilitary units."

Originally from Spain, Father Lopez lived in Guatemala for 21 years; at the end, he was part of a 10-member team, including teachers and social workers, tending to peasants in a northwestern province on the Mexican border.

Of the ten, he reported in an in-terview here the other day, eight are dead at the hands of Gua-temalan government "security forces" and the ninth, at last word, had gone underground.

He speaks, volubly, of government repression and wholesale murder of opposition political leaders, trade unionists, lawyers, journalists and priests — anybody suspected of sympathy or associa-tion with a rising anti-government guerrilla movement in the country-The secretary of state, in a classified "background paper" circulated to American diplomatic mis-

So what we have here is two people, of rather different stations and perspectives, speaking with some considerable knowledge and authority of the same situation in a way that presents us with two to-tally different Guatemalas. What the administration's blind eye to anything but Marxist-Leninist leftwing insurgency inspired by Cuba and the Soviets is understandable in Guatemala. The parish where Father Lopez worked, by happen-stance, is 100 miles from critical Mexican oil fields. Guatemala is only one domino away from the ulimate domino, Mexico; topple it and, by Haig-Reagan reasoning, you scarcely have to worry about El Salvador.

This no doubt explains why the Mexicans are cool to the Guaemalan insurgency, while showing all sorts of sympathy to the leftists in El Salvador. Perhaps sheer prox-imity concentrates the mind. But it is equally possible that it causes principle, and sound policy, to give way to shortsighted expediency. Guatemala and El Salvador are Guatemala and El Savananin in significant ways indistinguishable. Both have repressive governable. Both resort to "death squads" and other forms of repression to terrorize the opposition.

Both are headed for elections next March which give every promise of perpetuating the status quo: chronic violence and gross so-cial inequity; incitement to widen-ing insurgency born of simple desperation; and choice opportunities for Communist expluitation of popular grievances, at low cost. Father Lopez concodes the bility. Understandably, he does not have Mr. Haig's larger picture of it — the type of arms involved. of it—the type of arms involved, the alleged rate of gens flow, the grand Cuban-Soviet conspiracy. What he sees is a pattern of government repression against the peasantry, abject powerty and hunger, agrarian "reform" designed not to feed peasants, but to promote cash crops for export. He sees Mayan Indians floring to Mexico or into the hills to join the guerrillas. He sees terrorized 12guerrillas. He sees terrorized 12-year-olds taking up gens.

What he sees, in other words, are government activities promoting insurgency. The present government has blocked every avenue except the Popular Army, he declares. A cutoff of American aid, he insists, would bring a democratic coalition government to power, with broad support. "in three

If even balf of what he says is so. then what he cannot see from his vantage point is not nearly as im-portant as what the Reagan administration cannot seem to see. There is a telling paragraph in Mr. Haig's "confidential" cable to cable to American envoys abroad:

This study does not attempt to explain why violent indigenous movements may develop, nor does it attempt to explain why inditant radicals who are self-proclaimed nationalists accept foreign gui-dance and assistance as readily as the evidence suggests."

One wonders why that other half of the story was not passed along to America's allies. 01961. The Washington Post.

U.S. Unions Seek Strategy to Stem Erosion of Power

T OS ANGELES - Battered by Le powerful economic and political forces, America's labor unions are urgently seeking new programs and policies to restore their dwindling influence.

They are trying to achieve that goal in the midst of revolutionary shifts in labor-management relations in this country, shifts that could slow if not indefinitely stall efforts to revitalize the labor move-

The confusing contradictory trends in labor relations these days make it difficult for the country's union leaders to devise strategies for coping with their many prob-lems on political and economic battlefronts.

There are angry, militant workers and union leaders who want to challenge what they see as unionbusting bosses and their political allies in the White House and Con-

These "confrontationists," led by men like the president of the International Association of Machinists, William Winpisinger, are convinced that most corporate executives, even in highly unionized industries, are out to destroy unionism itself, cut wages of workers and eliminate the laws and regulations unions have won over the

There is substantial evidence to support their arguments:

Many of these management lawyers, joined by employer associations and others, sponsor regular anti-union seminars all over the country. Employers pay $400 a day and more for executives to learn "strictly legal" anti-union techniques.

 Employers have also joined with the Reagan administration and conservatives in Congress to weaken job safety programs and environmental laws, reduce unemployment and workers' compensation benefits, eliminate government-paid training, retraining and job-placement services.

There would not be much room for confrontation between union leaders and executives like American Can's Tony Vedream, who recently said:

"I don't know where all of this [industrial democracy and cooperation with unions) is going to stop, if it ever does. unions to help end old-time rivalries and bring about a new cra of workplace democracy for America. It would be simple enough for the union leaders if they could divide management neatly into two groups: those who want to break unions and turn back the clock to pre-union days when their deci-sions were unchallenged, and those who truly want labor harmony and cooperation, not conflict. But the real world is not like that. Some seemingly hard-line employers do want labor peace, but do not want to give an appearance of weakness. Others preach peace but are secretly out to climinate unions and cut wages to increase their own profits.

And often there are both trends going on among management exocutives at the same time in the same company. Frustrated union leaders do not seem to know how they should respond to such seemingly contradictory trends in man-againent.

The result is an uncertainty among many union leaders about the proper course for labor's re-

Nevertheless, under its president, Lane Kirkland, the eloquent one-time sailor who succeeded the late George Meany, the 15 million-member AFL-CIO is pushing shead with new programs and policies that for now, at least skirt the problem of labor conflict versus

New Life

But it is taking major steps to revitalize the labor movement:

 Trying to increase its political clout by becoming an integral part of the Democratic Party structure, through a doubling of the basic ex-penditures of its Committee on Poitical Education (to $3.5 million a year), and by taking part in Demo-cratic Party primaries so labor can help select candidates rather than just back the party nominees, which it usually does.

 Trying to improve its poor public image with a multimillion dollar communications program through the newly created AFL-CIO Institute of Public Affairs, which will help affiliated unions communicate with their own members and sponsor pro-union public advertising campaigns.

Trying to add new members by ploughing money into organizing campaigns in which sometimes-rival unions cooperate. For starters, the labor federation is putting about $1 million a year into a drive to win members in the Sun Beit of the Southwest, concentrating its initial efforts in the Houston area.

Perhaps most significant of all is

Mr. Kirkland's determination to revive the old liberal-labor-minoriries coalition that flourished under The moves toward labor-man-President Franklin D. Roosevelt and for decades kept the White agement cooperation in this country are being spurred by workplace harmony in Japan and other coun-tries that emphasize non-adversari-House and a congressional majority as staunch allies of labor.

Mr. Kirkland is offering leadership to the once-powerful coulition, hoping to rally nationwide support against President Reagan's "supply-side" economic policies. If unemployment continues to increase, as even administration officials predict, and the elderly, the poor and the minorities continue to bear the brunt of President Reagan's budget cutbacks, Mr. Kirkland might well revitable the political strength of labor.

And if the new attempts to exfurbish labor's public image are pushed as strenuously as the AFL-CIO leaders say they intend to do. there could be a renaissance for unions in the United States.

But no one should underestimate the magnitude of the job ahead for Mr. Kirkland and the AFL-CIO.

Roll Call

Unions today represent 22.4 million workers about 21 percent of the total workforce in 1953. unions represented 17.9 million workers, but that was nearly 26 percent of the labor force.

With contracts covering 3.6 million workers due to expire next year in auto, trucking, rubber and other industries, negotiations at the bargaining table are going to be rough, and labor cannot expect to make any major contract gains even if it can resist employer demands for wage cuts.

General Motors, a leader in the drive for industrial democracy, is one of the strongest advocates for major wage cuts to help it compete with the Japanese car makers. The United Auto Workers has already granted some wage concessions to Chrysler, and is considering similar cuts for American Motors. Other unious are doing the same thing, although, on the average, most workers are still getting pay

But next year the companies are expected to keep wage and fringe benefit increases well below the 11.5 percent increases won by unions in the first nine months of

Politically, the AFL-CIO's problems are equally great. The federa-tion worked vainly to keep Ronald Reagan cut of the White House, but now not only is Mr. Reagan president but he has a Republican majority in the Senate and a ma-jority of the Democratically con-trolled House gives him almost everything he wants.

EW YORK — Over the years, we have been asked endless times to provide recipes for cooked leftovers, foods such as fish, shellfish, chicken, mb, pork, beef and vegetables. To our minds, ere is no recipe so universally fitting that re-test as croquettes, which can be an excep-mally tasty appetizer or main course.

The word croquette derives from croquer, hich means to crunch. It is also related to roquant, meaning crisp. And, indeed, a cro-uette is so appealing because it is crunchy and crisp in its exterior and moist and tasty in Almost any cooked ingredient (and on occa-on even an uncooked ingredient) can be med into a tasty croquette, be it fish, red or fill hite meat, or fowl. The most basic recipe for requettes is, to our minds, one for freshly soked or leftover chicken, and the one below histrates our point. One may take the basic ripe for chicken and substitute - volume for olume - any chopped meat, either freshly poked or a leftover. The croquettes here are used from two and one-half caps cooked, hopped chicken. Oue could substitute hopped, cooked beef, pork, lamb and so on.

Among our other favorite croquettes are one rade with shrimp, along with an easy lewburg sauce, and one made with vegetables, ir which no sauce is needed.

I was so darned sorry for poor old Corky that I hadn't the heart to touch my breakfast. I told Jeeves to drink it himself.

Oh, the Moaning After

ARIS — The season for liquid break-fasts is upon us and the eboice is wide if difficult to make: any oumber of pick-me-ups from the slithery prairie oyster in the well-named French rince-cochon; vitamin pills, which tend to go down like golf balls; and Alka Seltzer, which is far too noisy "Can't anyone stop that racket?" W.C. Fields once pleaded when the fizzing became intolerable). For sheer simplicity nathing can beat the remedy of the late Eddie Condon: "Take the juice of two quarts of whisky . . . "

To help survive the season to be jully, two volumes, slim enough to be beld by the most oerveless fingers, have recently come out: David E. Outerbridge's "The Hangover Hand-book" and Clement Freud's "Book of Hang-

Freud, a British parliamentarian, bon vivant and famous grandson, dates the first hangover to some 10,000 years ago when primitive man discovered that certain fruits or boney and water, if left in a warm atmosphere, would change in taste. The first hangover, Freud contends, occurred about three and a half hours later.

Outerbridge credits Noah with the invention of the cocktail hour ("Noah, the tiller of the soil, was the first in plant a vineyard. And he drank of the wine, and became drunk"). He traces the invention of the process of distilla-tion to an Arab who, 1,200 years ago, gave us

Alkuhl, or alcohol, taken in quantity depresses the brain, which is why most people drink it, says Freud. But alcohol itself is not to blame. The liver, Outerbridge explains, could ingest pure laboratory-grade ethyl alcohol much more easily than the liquids we drink which are full of disruptive chemicals called congeners, some of them so toxic that they would be lethal if drunk straight.

To avoid bangovers, says Outerbridge, the drinker should choose booze closest to the pure version - white wine rather than red, for example, and vodka rather than bourbon. Port, brandy, sherry, vermouth and dark runs are also high in congeners, adds Freud, but personal body chemistry determines each person's reaction to his or her preferred poison.

Sweet drinks act faster than dry ones, iced drinks faster than those at room temperature, a shorter, time, says Freud. He also says that champagne produces a worse hangover than still wine, a familiar claim furiously disputed by a champagne manufacturer who growls, "It's not the champagne, it's those damned tinctures in having a jolting alcobnlie content are the revolting Fernet Branca (80 proof) and Underberg (84 proof), berbal mixtures that contain sufficient alcohol to fit in the hair-ofthe-dog classification. They are best drunk neat and very quickly night out by eating peanut butter and mayon-naise sandwiehes; the proverb about an ounce of prevention being worth a pouod of cure has never sounded more cockeyed.

The cure — here opinions differ, from the ancient Assyrians who downed crushed swal-

Outerbridge, since calcium helps) to the stringent advice of the abstemious William F.

Aspirin is good for the bead but bad for the stomach. Lots of people use vitamin mixtures. Then there are the druggists' tinetures such as the one — recommended by both Freud and Outerbridge — made by D.R. Harris and Co. of St. James's, London, which claims to work as a rapid restorative. Similar to the druggists'

The foods that Outerbridge recommends hangover sufferers to eat sound equally appal-ling, being based largely oo berring and cabbage. Oranges, lemons and booey sound a lot better and have even won medical approval. Outerbridge also mentions a Latin-American cure called Tratamiento de Choque, which consists of raw fish, lemon jurice, onions and hot

The phrase hair of the dog is traced to the 16th-century playwright John Heywood: "I pray thee let me and my fellow have/A haire of the dog that bit us last night," For the literal-minded there is even a cocktail of that name, consisting of scotch, honey and heavy

Robert Benchley reckoned that there is no cure for a hangover except death, but people keep trying. H. Allen Smith recommended that the sufferer lie face down on a snow drift, while social chronicler Anthony Haden-Guest suggests a Buck's Fizz (champagne and orange juice) combined with a visit to an art gallery:
"There's oothing so calming to the head as the Dutch school. No wonder so many Vermeers have been stolen."

Clement Freud apparently believes in the benefits of water, taken in the form of a showsuggest drinking it. That has been left to greater men such as Lord Byroo with his sermons and soda water and Mark Twain, who cau-tiously observed, "Water taken in moderation cannot burt anybody."

Turkey's Generals Await a Tourist Rush

NKARA - Military regimes have a way of imposing a certain calm over countries they rule — masking other realities — and Turkey is no excepion. "Tourism flourished under "maco in Spain and the colonels in Greece we see no exception here," adds another offi-

The average tourist does oo: have to worry thout confrontations with the regime—uness, for example, one accidently wanders near he heavily guarded parliament building here, t now houses the National Security Council, he regime's executive body. On my way to an appointment in the building, I accidently trayed off the path indicated by ministry officials only to be ordered away by an unaming. irmed soldier who was barring the path.

"The parliament is not a tourist site," ex-plains a government interpreter, adding "but it will be when democracy is someday restored in his country."

First for the ruling generals, however, is an ambitious economic recovery plan based heavly an promoting tourism.

"We want visitors from the United States, Europe, Japan and elsewhere to enjoy our country and our hospitality," explains a senior of ficial in the Turkish Ministry of Tourism, stressing that even Brazilian coffee is now available in most hotels and luxury restanrants. For many previous months, as part of its austerity program, the regime simply refused to allow coffee to be imported, despite its enormous popularity.

New botels, camping sites and other tourist facilities are beginning to sprout, particularly oo and near Turkey's scenic, southwestern coast. The country's six major airports are being modernized, along with highways, water and communications networks. Charter planes have been permitted to fly in and ministry offi-cials are predicting a 40 percent increase in tourism this year.

Yet Turkey has not built a new international-class hotel since 1976 and there are still more hotel beds on the small, neighboring island of Rhodes than in all of Turkey. "In the summer when things get crowded, this place simply becomes a madhouse," says the conci-erge of the modern Sheraton-Istanbul, which does brisk business most months of the year. Other realities are starker

Other realities are starker.

Arriving at Ankara airport one evening, I thought very bitle about the steady rain until several days later when I picked up the Daily News, Turkey's only English-language daily. It confirmed the startling discovery of 319 cases of typhoid among Turks living in an area near the airport known as geceivants — meaning, literally, bousing built overnight.

"On the day you arrived, flooding caused the sewage and drinking water to mix... Of course, no danger to you or other foreigners," comments a somewhat embarrassed government official. "We certainly are not proud of these shantytowns and I would not go there if I were you, but they do exist."

Shabby housing and slums can be found in shabby housing and stums can be found in just about any major city of the world and, of course, all this existed before the generals took power in September, 1980. Indeed, they continue stressing that they are on the right path, that their economic program will succeed and that democracy will someday be restored. Per-

The lack of modern conveniences, such as adequate telephone lines, is evident even in the modern hotels; it requires at least an hour to place a call from Ankara to Istanbul. # The Iron Butterflies

by Hebe Dorsey

ONG KONG - They tread and talk softly, wear lacquer-red finger-nails and russet eye-shadow. With calm, pale, porcelain profiles, they smile and listen and answer every question, even the most personal ones, without batting a single mascara-ed eyelash. You might call them Iron Butterflies, for they are frail and polite and, unlike their Western sisters, never come on strong. But beware: sometimes onknown to the general public, they are giants in their own field, workaholics, powerhouses, and they rule worldwide companies with a smooth-by gloved yet iron hand.

The three most notable "botterflies" in this part of the world are Hanae Mori, Lydia L. Dunn and Kai-Yin Lo. All of them are involved in fashion, running their businesses as powerful heads of industries.

Hanae Mori, the Japanese designer of international renown, deserves the butterfly nick-name for many reasons. For one thing, she has made the butterfly her symbol and put it onto everything from evening bags to belts and bedsheets and even her crystal ashtrays. There are moments when Mon — her pretty round face framed by clouds of fluffy hair and she berself floating, more than walking, into a room—even looks like a butterfly.

Again, beware, Behind the smiling and ever-so-courteous surface he immense drive and determination. One of the rare women serving as a corporate president, Mori has made it into the Japanese, male-dominated business world, and has built an empire with total sales of $300 million in 1981. She has 67 boutiques in Japan, 350 retail outlets in the United States plus 2 boutiques in New York, 30 retail outlets in Europe and the feather in her cap, a highfashion conture house in Paris that opened in 1977 in partnership with Henry Berghauer, a former general manager at Cardin's and Un-

Berghauer, who is married to Hiroko, a close friend of Mori's and the first doll-like Japanese mannequin brought over to Paris by Cardin, says of Mori: "Twe known Hanae for 20 odd years, ever since she opened her first boutique.
I am very impressed by her stubbornness. No matter what, she gets there. What would be a defect in other poeple is a great virtue with her. Having known and having had to live with a lnı of designers, 1 am also impressed by her bumility. She is Hanae Mori but she is also a human being."

Mori, now in her 50s, was not prepared for such a career. The daughter of a surgeoo who sent her to Tokyo University in the hope that she might succeed him, she got her degree, then got married, then got bored. With the backing of her husband, a textile manufacturer, she opened her first studio in 1950. Fascinated by the Japanese movie world, she designed costumes for more than 1,000 movies and became a favorite with such film directors as Misoguchi and Kurosawa "until they turned to sex and did not need me any more."

A trip to France in 1962 and a meeting with Chanel changed the course of ber career. With a distinct feeling for her heritage (most noticeable in her poetic prints and colors) she went into business and started introducing Western wear in a world still dominated by kimonos.

Four years ago, Mori took a further step. To inaugurate The Space, her handsome new Tokyo headquarters, she established the so-called Best Fashion Awards — bringing over famous international designers, many of whom had never been in the same room. Always treading softly, but surely, she took into the project the publisher of Women's Wear Daily, John B. Fairchild, with whom one of her two sons, Akira, started a Japanese edition of the U.S.

Mori lives in an apartment next door to her Space, with her younger son, Kei, who has his own fashion business, and her husband, who manages her firm. In her quiet, beige salon, surrounded by white orchids and striking obstants. jets d'art, sipping champagne from crystal flutes, Mori has to admit that yes, work is her one and only hobby.

Lydia Dunn is the managing director of Swire and Maclaine, one of the oldest Hong Kong trading companies and part of Swire Pacilic, a parent company of the Swire Group, a London-based, multimillion-dollar, multinstional holding company.

What she does best is blend antique and rare Oriental pieces with more-modest natural ma-terials, such as bone, ivory, shell, enamel and wood. # Honoring Verdi in Food and Drink

by John L. Hess

USSETO. Italy — By some delicious mystery, the middle stretch of the Po Valley brings forth some of the finest cheeses, hams and musicians in the world. Paganini and Toscanini were Parmesan. Pavarotti is from Modena and Tehaldi from Langhirano, which also boasts the noblest prosciutto of them all.

The finest salami is claimed by Felino, and the most aristocratic mortadella (elsewhere vulgarly and erroneously dubbed bologna) by Cremona, there where the great fiddles once were made and where Monleverdi was born. And the very best culatello, the air-cured heart of the ham, comes from Busseto, the home of Giuseppe Verdi. A townsman, the famous tenor Carlo Bergonzi, says proudly, "Verdi hrought two culatelli 10 Sl. Petersburg for the dehut of 'La Forza del Destino.' Thanks to Bergonzi, the little town of Busseto is a most agreeable spot to savor the mystery. The rich but not spectacular plain of the Po is off the beaten track for tourists, but it is dotted with castles and arcaded village squares, a number of them in easy biking dis-tance. Verdi's modest birthplace and the grander estate where he grew old are close by. and there are occasional concerts in the church and in the miniature copy of La Scala that was built in Busseto's castle in Verdi's honor.

But there was no decent accommodation until Bergonzi built I Due Foscari. Why that particular Verdi opera? He shrugs his heavy shoulders. "In the world," he says, "I have seen many restaurants named for operas, but not that one." It was begun as a restaurant, in 1961, but four years and a fortune of money later, it was a three-story palazzo of burnt stone, harmonizing with the rest of the town square. The decor is heavy Venetian-Moorish, with each of the 20 people of the individually with each of the 20 rooms styled individually and luxuriously, some inspired by Verd

The bar, the dining room, the terrace and the ornate banquet hall below are gathering places for the local gentry and visitors from Milan and beyond. Bergonzi's handsome young son Marco presides over these when his lather is away.

Running the kitchen, as is traditional in the Emilia Romagna, is a woman, Faliva Iaole. Her specialties are the marvelous pastas, chic-chi verdi nel nonna (a sort of gnocchi of flour, egg, potato and spinach in a cream sauce), caramelli di Verdi (like a twisted ravioli), crispelli (crepes stuffed with ricotta) and so on. But first one must begin with the ample platter of culatello, prosciutto and salami. And one had best end, after perhaps a salad from the kitchen garden, with as fine a grano (elsewhere in the world loosely called Parmesan cheese] as one is likely ever to taste.

As for the wine, well, the grape of the region is Lambrusco, which is popular in some places because it rather resembles a cherry soda. One may, as a native put it, make one's peace with Lambrusco - or order any of the fine wines of the nearby mountains. The prices are still cheap, with dinner for two under the equivalent of $35; clearly, I Due Foscari is a gift of love from Bergonzi to Verdi and their native

The mystery of the cheese, the ham and the music comes together here. Bergonzi himself is the son of a cheesemaker — "My father was an artist of cheese," he declares — and the son worked in the family trade until his mid-20s. Handling the milk cans, stirring the great vats and turning the 75-pound wheels of cheese is heavy work, and it seems likely that this apprenticeship accounts for Bergonzi's extraordinary durability as a tenor at age 57.

Bergonzi rents a cellar in Busseto to store

pork, cheese and wine. "When you have an old warehouse," he says, "the cheese is good." He observes that the same products, made in the same way but ripened in, say, Piacenza, will not be the same and will, in fact, command only two-thirds the price. And these differences prevail from product to product, and from sprevant from product to product to village to village.

So how to account for it? Bergonzi shrugs and offers, with a smile, "The air." Which stands also for the soil and the bacteria and the b the microclimate. But air — "aria" — also means a song, and a song is music and Bergon-zi says everybody in this his country loves music and that, of course, brings it all together.

An Old Friend, the Swiss Almanac

by Calla Corner

FVEY. Switzerland — Steeped in nostalgia, late with the news, printing no sex or politics in its pages, catering to a conservative public that fears change and always bearing the same cover, "Le Messager Boiteux, Almanach Romand" sells 140,000 copies a year, defying the laws of time and journalism as it continues to be a best seller in French-speaking Switzerland and the adjoining regions of France.

The original paperbacks, almanacs — the word comes from the Arabic manch, meaning count — first appeared in the late 17th century when the printed word began to unite Europe in a general thirst for knowledge, Combining the Gregorian calendar with accounts of great events of the times, these pamphlets were sold door to door, in the marketplace and at fairs by wounded war veterans with wooden legs (messagers boil (eux). The pamphlets found a public eager to read but unable to afford expensive books and who believed what happened in the heavens governed their lives.

"Le Messager Boiteux," originally printed in Vevey as the French edition of a Bernese almanac, was an immediate success when it first appeared in 1708. With only a fifth of the Swiss able to read and almost entirely dependent upon agriculture, the Almanach filled a large gap in knowledge that divided those in the country from those in the cities, who knew of world events because of communications resulting from wars

Even more important, the Almanach, by providing an astrological calendar, gave the farmer the information he needed, the hundreds of practical details that meant feast or famine. Appearing in the fall, it pecame crucial to the French-speaking Swiss farmer and the French across the Lake of Geneva or on the other side of the Jura mountains, who had much in common geographically and historically with their Swiss neighbors.

As soon as it was purchased, the Almanach was punctured in the upper left corner, fitted with a string and hung in an obvious place to be consulted at a moment's notice or made available for reading aloud in the evening.

Bernard Crettaz, curator of the Musée d'Ethnographie in Geneva, in an essay on the Almanach explaining this publishing phenomenon, writes that in the Val d'Anniviers, a small valley between the Rhone and the Italian Alps where he grew up, the Almanach was known as "La Pratique" because it was so important to daily life. "By consulting the endar, the farmer knew when to prune the water the fields, cut wood, slaughter stock, dig ditches, wash the house, cut one's hair and nails and trim the cattle's horns." Crettaz also gives his theory on why the Almanach is still a best seller although barely 7 percent of its readers live on farms. "City dwellers may laugh at the peasant's beliefs in astrology hat we are presently witnessing a massive return to the readings of the zodiac, a resurgence of anything that is

Apart from the calendar, the Almanach gave the dates of fairs and the names of saints for newborns. Blank pages were provided for the farmer's daily notations. On the back inside cover was the multiplication table, to aid an age without calculators. Proverbs and dictums were scattered throughout to complement the Bible.

Of secondary importance were the Almanach's pages dealing with society and the farmer's slowly expanding universe. Even though the cover has never changed over the years, the contents showed the farmer that the world was changing fast although he might be one of the last to hear about it. In the 1777 edition, for example, the Almanach reports on the war between the English and their American colonies, which it bad heen following in previous editions since the Boston Tea Party, and says that a meeting had been held in Philadelphia to "try to maintain peace in America's new-found liberty." It assures the readers that the Almanach will hring them news in its next edition of a "possible just peace settle-

The Almanach also reported sensational news to stir the imagination and give food for thought during the long winter nights: Tales of a wife being heaten and even devoured by ber busband in Avignon, of a Swiss woman being killed by her 18 cats, of hideous monsters spotted in foreign lands, of royal marriages and hirths, long sea voyages of discovery and new inventions filled the Almanach's pages during the 18th and 19th out a hole off the press it didn't need one."

centuries. Accompanying the stories there would often be detailed engravings. If its main joh was to inform and amuse, the Almanach's secondary role was to reinforce the reader's belief in the strict values of the time. Again and again over the centuries the reader is reminded that work. family, frugality and God are sacred.

raphs, showing the 10 principal cloud formations, but its editor. Michel Zangger, says the Almanach is still basically published with the original concept of heing positive, informative and amusing. "Maybe people aren't buying it to know when to plant their potatoes or cut their hair but if they are the Almanach will still tell them," he says. "We have a faithful following that thinks of the Almanach as an old friend, and that is enough to ensure its continuity."

Zangger says that there is an unwritten law in the editorial office that the Almanach should avoid politics and innuendo but that it's almost impossible to publish the written word and avoid opinion, although "Le Messager Boiteux" probably comes close. "Opinion is there since the beginning if you read between the lines," he says. And to prove it, his latest editorial states that the reason Switzerland is so prosperous is because it hasn't fallen prey to unionism and that the Swiss working week is three to five hours longer than other industrialized countries.

Ten years ago, Zangger says, be asked readers if they had any sugg tions for improving their Alamanach. He got 6,000 letters, most of which told him to leave it alone. "We did consider one suggestion," he admits. That was to put a bole in the upper left corner. In the end we didn't do

IENNA — Twenty-live years ago, on Dec. 29, 1956, Ruth Draper gave Saturday matinee and evening perfor-mances of ber one-woman show on Broadway. Her hired car was waiting when she left the theater at 11:30 p.m. On an impulse, the 72-year-old actress asked the driver to take the long way home — down to Times Square, east across 42d Street, up Fifth Avenue past the Plaza and Central Park — through her nauve Manhattan, still sparkling with Christmas lights and decorations, to her apartment on East 79th Street, where her maid had laid out midnight supper. Ruth Draper are and went to bed, never to awaken. It was a quiet death, a fitting curtain to a life that had been lived with dignity and devotion to craftsmanship and art. But, like many quiet ives. Ruth Draper's had been lived to the hilt with intense passion, doomed romance, and high tragedy of which today's world knows or remembers little, although the Spoken Arts series of five records of her monologues remain steady sellers.

A woman alone, Ruth Draper never married, never studied acting, never took an elocu-tion lesson, never went to classes in miming or riming. Yet, John Gielgud wrote in 1978 that "Ruth Draper was (with Martha Graham) the greatest individual performer that America has ever given us "

In her time, she was described as monologist, impersonator, mimic, reciter, diseuse, solo performer, one-woman theater. But she considered herself a "character actress," both comic and dramatic. It was her own observation of character she drew on to transform herself at the drop of a shawl, which was her particular emblero — from a Dalmatian peasant to a Southern belle, from a miner's wife to a Scottish lassie landing at Ellis Island. Author as well as performer, she peopled the stage with her characters and their worlds - to such a magical extent that theatergoers sometimes remarked that "the man was very good, too, only to be reminded that what they had wilnessed was a one-woman show. Ruth Draper was born at home - a three-

In Memoriam, Ruth Draper story brownstone house on East 47th Street — on Dec. 2, 1884. Her father was a doctor and her mother was a Dana: daughter of the Yan-kee liberal intellectual Charles A. Dana, who served in Lincoln's Cabinet during the Civil War and founded The New York Sun. The next-to-last of eight Draper children ther kid brother was the father of the tap dancer Paul Draper), Ruth was educated at home by tulors and governesses and grew up in the society world of the Eastern seaboard, where sk watched and witoessed, observed and gathered her material, and sometimes performed forfamily and friends her impersonations of a German governess or a ladies tailor. "What I've had as a child, I never lost — the child's ability to pretend: to be what he imagines he is," she said when she was 70. Her parents' house was a salon where music and poetry, intellect and science met as equals and stimulated each other. The pianist Paderewski, the writers Henry Adams and Henry James were family friends; in fact, it was James who gave Ruth Draper the advice to go public with her talent.

In his later years, Henry James tried his hand at writing a monologue for her. But she just could not perform anything she hadn't written herself, which is why her one appearance in somehody else's play — "A Lady's Name." by Cyril Harcourt on Broadway in 1916 — was not a success. Not until 1920 at the Aeolian Hall in London did she give a paid professional performance of a full program of professional performance of a full program of character sketches, though she had been giving charity benefits for nearly two decades, including wartime tours of Army bases and hospitals, and invitational soirées before many of the crowned heads of Europe.

Crinical and popular success came overnight at age 35. The Observer called her the "hit of the season" and another London critic promptly proclaimed that "Miss Draper has established herself as an institution." From theo on, she performed regularly in the West End and on Broadway, in Paris, Warsaw and

In 1928, in Rome, Ruth Draper met a young Italian poet, Lauro de Bosis. He followed her to New York and back to Europe. The actress in ber 40s and the poet in his 20s were almost inseparable for the three-and-a-half years that remained to his life.

Lauro de Bosis was not just a poet and a lover but also a pilot and an anti-fascist active in the resistance to Mussolini. On Oct. 3, 1931, not long after his mother and two fellow plotters were arrested in Rome, he took off from Marseilles in a small plane loaded with half a million leaflets denouncing the fascist movement. He arrived above Rome toward 9 p.m. and showered his leafets into the streets. He remained about half an hour and the Italian Air Force was sent in pursuit. No trace of him or his plane was ever discovered. He is believed to have run out of fuel and crashed and drowned at sea.

Ruth Draper, who had been waiting for him in France, buried berself in her work and outlived him by a quarter of a century. Perhaps ber epitaph was best spoken years before her death, when Mrs. Patrick Campbell persuaded George Bernard Shaw to attend Ruth Draper's monologues. As soon as the show was over, Mrs. Campbell exclaimed to Shaw: "Have yoo ever seen such acting in your life?"

And Shaw replied: "That's not acting. That's life."

Man Ray Under the Lens

by Michael Gibson

ARIS — The name Man Ray appears officially for the first time on the registers of a justice of the peace in Ridge-field, N. J., where the artist was married in 1913 at the age of 23. His former name has not been officially preserved, though it is known that his parents were Russian Jewish immigrants, that they were living in Philadelphin at the time of his birth and moved to Brooklyn when he was 3. His biographical notes tell us little about his early years: 1903: notes tell us little about his early years: 1903: Bar Mitzvah; 1904: High School, are the bare notations of the catalog of the show now de-voted to his work at the Pompidou Center (to

This matter of his name is significant. It reflects, in an unusual form, something that is a basic tenet both of the American psyche of that period and of avant-garde art: the severing of roots.

Marcel Duchamp, whom Man Ray met in 1915, was a decisive influence, and it is interesting to note some parallel aspects in their ives. Duchamp severed his French roots and spent most of his life in New York. Man Ray. spent most of his life in New York. Man Ray, having taken a first step with his name, moved to Paris in 1921 and, except for the decade when he lived in the United States, during and after the German occupation of France, he spent all his life in France, dying in Paris in 1976. At the outset, Ray and Duchamp worked together quite closely, making joint experimental films (one venture that was never recorded because the subject got too violently recorded because the subject got too violently aroused later became the theme of Duchamp's last work — a gape-legged female nude — now in the Philadelphia Museum) and Man Ray was rather superficially influenced by Duchamp's, and Picabia's, paintings of machines

i as an allegory of man. The mood of such works by Man Ray is less insolent than Picabia's and less chilling than Duchamp's. Picabia was a figure of fashionable society; Duchamp, without disdaining the smart set in New York, was more of an introvert and an intellectual. Man Ray, on the other was something of an intuitive experihand, was something of an intuitive experimenter with neither the arrogance of Picabia (who, characteristically, at the end of World War II, had to go into hiding to escape both the Nazis and the Free French) nor the unter single-mindedness that gives Duchamp's work its intensity. Man Ray's works in this style communicate the feeling that "he just thought he'd give it a try," which implies that he was first and foremost an experimenter, a man experimenting not only with media but also with social restrictions.

"Each one of us, in his timidity, has a limit beyond which he is outraged," he said. "It is inevitable that he who, by concentrated application, has extended this limit for himself, should arrow to the said. should arouse the resentment of those who have accepted conventions which, since accepted by all, require no initiative of applica-uon. And this resentment generally takes the form of meaningless laughter or of criticism, if not of persecution. But this apparent violation is preferable to the monstrous habits condoned by etiquette and aestheticism."

Man Ray was a natural dadaist, (e.g. his laundry-iron with tacks glued to the bottom), hut more fundamentally he was neither a dadaist nor even a surrealist, being unconcerned by long-term militant provocation and by the politics of the unconscious. Certainly he liked the surrealist search for fortuitous, ironic beauty, and be even made a photograph illustrating the now-much-overquoted phrase by Lau-treamont: "As beautiful as the chance encounter of an umbrella and a sewing machine on a dissecting table." But one gets the feeling that Man Ray's chance was not so much that of free association but much more the sort of ex-perimental chance of scientific testing — "l wonder what would happen if ...."

Also, his eyes were more consistently turned to the outside world, and one can easily understand that he should have become involved with photography. The larger part of the Beau-bourg exhibition is devoted to his photographs and in this area too there is a great diversity in

The first aspect is that of portraitist of the art community of the 1930s and the post-World War II years. There are Kurt Schwitters ("he didn't smell as bad as people said," Man Ray remarked) and Gertrude Stein (who once wrote to the artist pointing out that she had never asked for royalties on the pictures of her that he sold — apparently he had been complaining about hard times), and Catherine Deneuve and Juliette Greco. The older portraits have a twofold interest: They give the viewer an insight into the artists' characters and they remind one that all these artists were very young men and women, rebellious and unacknowledged, and not the monuments that time and the market have made of them.

Man Ray felt this himself, as when an interviewer from "Camera" asked him: "Do you feel that being a historical figure of the art world is a burden?" He replied with feeling: 'lt's a calamity! A major calamity!"

So here is Duchamp at 29 looking like a wistful, defrocked seminarian; Antonin Artaud, at 30, a perfect Heathcliffe, handsome and paranoid; a massive, youthful Bunuel; a juvenile Dali at once repulsively soft and dangered the state of the s gerously sharp; a powerful, intractable Arnold schönberg, a Moses of music, together with Calder, Lifar, Radiguet, Varese, Virginia Woolf — a visual Who's Who that reveals the true face of an age, or at least of its intellimodel for countless artists, including Fujita, Friez, Kisling and Maillol. Kiki, in fact, was the accidental inspiration for one of Man Ray's most famous paintings, which shows an enormous pair of lips floating in the evening

"One evening," Man Ray related, "I was dressing for an important dinner at which I was supposed to meet some potential clients. She helped me to dress ... then put her arms around me, kissed me tenderly, and asked me not to come home too late. We had dinner in a very fashionable restaurant and then we went on to n night club, I asked my bost's wife to dance. She asked me to go to the men's room first and fix my clothes. I looked at her with surprise, put my hand to my bow tie, straightened my waistcoat: everything seemed to be in order. Then I looked into the mirror. On my collar I saw the perfect imprint of a magnificent red mouth."

Then there are the Rayographs. The tech-nique is simple: Various objects are placed on a sheet of photographic paper and the hight is turned on briefly; upon development, the object's shadow turns up white on the black ground of the exposed paper. Here too, the interest of the process resides in the results of experiment and chance, and in the durable trace of an instant - which any photograph inevitably is, though in an obviously more so-phisticated way. What bolds the interest is ool so much the trace as the fact that it makes the fugitive quality of the instant perceptible in a Man Ray was an experimenter in photo techniques too, playing with solarisation (exposure of a picture to the sun's light during development) to give peculiar sculptural effects, and always using his imaginative eye to discover metaphoric effects in everday sights. "My role as a 'photographer' allowed me to go everywhere and to be much talked about," be said. "Also it kept me out of the fierce competition which rages among painters here."

Christie's Changes the Rules

by Souren Melikian .-

ONDON - Christie's made a dramatic move on the cheschoard of its 20-year-old war game with Sothehy's this week when Christie's chairman of the board, John Floyd, said the firm would cut the fee charged to the buyer on top of the knock-down price — known in London as the "huyer's premium" — from 10 to 8 percent. The week before, Sotheby's announced contrary, that it was not changing its 10 per-cent huyer's premium. Christie's measure is ef-

This is the first time in years that a differ-ence can be observed in the auction strategy of the two firms.

Christie's said the decision was related to a settlement reached in September with the two main English trade organizations, which ques-tioned the legality of levying a buyer's premi-um and which blamed the two firms for coordinating policies, all of it in the name of "fair trading."
Christie's, however, also emphasized that "the new rate of the buyer's premium will now be significantly lower than that charged by competitors." In a telephone interview, Floyd admitted that this was "primarily a commercial decision." Noting that the market had been experiencing difficulties, he added, "We want to encourage purchases. This is the moment to go after the huyer."

To compensate for the loss of revenue resulting from the lowering of the "buyer's premium," the fee charged to sellers by Chrisue's main London operation at 8 King Street will be raised from 10 to 12.5 percent on lots selling under £1,000 (about $1,880). At "Christie's South Kensington," which runs a fast-sale service on Old Brompton Road, there will be no change — there is no buyer's premium there and vendors are charged a flat 15 percent commission. The same applies to Christie's Scottish hranch in Glasgow. Concerning vendors. Christie's emphasized that the charge would remain to percent above £1,000 to insure the continued flow of business from above.

For its part. Sothehy's made it known the week before that it was putting up the vendor's commission from 10 to 15 percent on all items selling for £500 or less. Its fast-sale system, efficiently operated by Malcolm Barber, keeps its 10 percent charge to both vendor and buyer.

The English media have taken Christie's move as a drastic innovation and treated it as hig news. It is not — at least not in the first degree. A 2 percent variation in the extra fee charged to the buyer is bardly meaningful as Anybody who has attended auctions as a buyer, not just as an onlonker, knows in his bones that, as the price goes up, the bidder just doesn't care about the 2 percent difference on top of the hammer price he may have to pay if he comes out as the winner. On the other hand, when it comes to deciding on an auction-house, vendors holding goods are more con-cerned about salesmanship than about a 2-per-cent variation in the service charge. True, Christie's decision may have a psychological effect on the lower end of the market — which is financially important because this is where the auction houses hold their "bread-and-butter sales," those that actually bring in profits.

Yet, even there, it is unlikely to tip the scales.

The sensational news, which appears to have been missed entirely so far, lies elsewhere in the flurry of press releases: Sotheby's and Chrisue's announcements are the first public admissions that a serious crisis is affecting the auction world. Sotheby's said in so many words that "it is essential for Sotheby-Parke-Bernet to increase its revenue." More ominous still. Sotheby's decided for the first time to withhold publication of its end-of-term figures—ohviously because they would be unflattering. Christic's published report spectacularly reflects the recession. Net sales, worldwide, rose to £70.844,000. compared with £70.374,000 last year. With the current inflation rate, this amounts to about a 10 percent reduction in sales.

In fact, the two leading auction houses in the world have fallen victims to the intense competition that has been going on between them over the last two decades and to the worldwide strategy that they have embarked on to wrench a higger share of the international market from foreign competitors.

To do so, they baye vastly improved their services. Some of their catalogs are as good as art books — and as expensive for the publisher, although not for the buyer. Traveling exhibitions make good publicity and may boost the sales of the objects directly involved, but they are costly. And so is, above all, the mushrooming of regional offices, which Sothehy's and, to a much-lesser extent. Christie's have indulged in to attract an ever-increasing number of ven-

All that was probably inevitable but, as in war, there comes a time when fighters can no longer afford the weaponry. It is highly prohable that sconer or later Sothehy's will take new steps to match Christie's countermove to its own raising of the vendor's fee. "The ability to maintain the new commission structure will depend on trading during the next few months." Sothery's announced. And, for the first time in this reporter's experience, following Christle's announcement, none of Sothe-hy's decision-makers were available for com-

Arthur, Once and Present King

by Max Wykes-Joyce

ONDON - In the medieval court po-etry of Christendom, which extended from the west of Britain to the crusader castles of the Near East, there were three archetypal heroes — Alexander the Great, the Emperor Charlemagne and King Arthur of Britain.

King Arthur very early predominated over the other two, and from that day to this, a period of almost 800 years, has continually inspired poets and artists. The most recent manifestation is an exhibition (to Jan. 16 at the Wraxall Gallery, 25 Cheval Place, S.W.7) of "Contemporary Paintings and Sculptures In-spired by the Legends of King Arthur and the Holy Grail," with contributions from more

The general sense of splendor and fantasy is set by the huge glass mosaic sword "Excali-bur" by Andrew Logan in the center of the gallery and three of Gumevere's gowns from John Boorman's film "Excalibur," hanging on one wall like banners in a jousting pavision. .

Curiously enough, King Arthur hintself sel-dom is a feature of the exhibition -at the center of a group portrait of the persoffages of "King Arthur's Court" by Joanna Campion; as a shadowy figure in the background of "Arthur's Inspiration," a drawing by Brian Carter, as a snail — clearly here Morgan le Fay or some other enchantress has been at work — in Peter Cross' miniature "Arthur the Snail Aspires to Higher Things Whilst Lady Bird of Shallott Floats Past on a Leaf"; and as protagonist, with Queen Guinevere, in the Pre-Ra-phaelitish drawing by Ed Perera, "Arthur's Queen Guinevere, the epitome of romantic, ill-starred love, is a natural subject for the fertile imagination. She appears as one of the se-ries of portraits of "Knights of the Round Table and Ladies of the Court" by Malcolm Ashman; as the prophetic daydreamer, backed by the West Country landscape with its sug-gestion of slumbering giants in Graham Ar-oold's masterly "Guinevere's Premonition"; petting a hird in Marion Thomas' "Guinevere and the Raven" (one of the Arthurian tradi-tions says that the king did ool die in combat, but was transmogrified by sorcery into a ra-ven, a circumstance that Cervanies in "Don Quixole" uses to explain why a Briton oever kills a raven, lest he should unwittingly kill the king); herself "Disguised as a Bird and Meeting Merlin at the Edge of the Wood," small mystical paintings by Elizabeth Collins.

"Morgan le Fay" equally inspires Ashman, whose drawing of her is the very summation of fascinating evil incarnate, just as his "Lady of the Lake," she who gives the king Excalibur, is a lady of mystery. She is similarly enigmatic in Ann Arnold's painting where, her back towards the viewer, she strides lakeward.

The individual knight, especially Sir Gawain and Sir Lancelot, the visionary of the Holy Grail, is well represented, as are Cadbury Castle, the king's headquarters, the vision of the Genile the prostocious purposide of Medic's Grail, the mysterious pyramids of Merlin's magic, the enchanted lands in which the Grail is sought and the Chapel Perilous.

The most magical painting of all, however, is one but tenuously connected with King Arthur. It is a pattern symmetry of "Mute Swans" painted like a Roman fresco by Roy Turlington. The swan is in ooe traditioo the royal bird, in another the bird of Orpheus/Apollo - poetry and music. The swans, hatched in thunder, immortal, afloat upon the water of Camelot, were the silent witnesses of the Grail's appearance at the Round Table...

"Then anon they heard a cracking and crying of thunder, that the Palace should all y-bursten. Io the middest of the blast entered a suobeam, more clearer by seven times than ever they saw day. There was no knight that might speak one word a great while, and so they looked every man on other as they had been dumb.

When de Chirico Stopped Dreaming

by Edith Schloss

OME — "Our thoughts and all those images which introduce themselves into our mind when we are awake ... have a close relationship to those we see in our dreams... Dreams are a strange phenomenon but even more inexplicahie is the mystery our mind confers to certain objects," said the young Giorgio de Chirico in his writings on Metaphysical art, a style early in this century of which he was one of the ma-

Born in Greece of Italian parents — the fa-ther a railroad engineer, the mother a Genoese aristocrat — he spent his adolescence with his brother (who later called himself Alberto Savinio) in Munich, where he came to admire the late romanticism of Boecklin and Springer and became attracted to the philosophies of Schopenhauer and Nietzsche. Then he traveled on lo Milan, Florence, then Paris, and eventually signed up for military service in Ferrara.

In that noble old Renaissance town, de Chirico and his brother met with other painters, including de Pisis, Carrà and Morandi, just before World War l. In their work they developed a wholly new attitude toward reali-ty: It was to be regarded as if under a spell, as if seen for the first time, as if seen through the

And the air between the arcades and towers over the city's squares was dazzling, yet chilly, the scene illuminated like a stage from an un-seen light source not the sun. This "Metaphysical" painting led to French Surrealism, which was less concerned with the general and with history and more with idiosyncratic, individual vision with Freudian overtones.

The exhibition Giorgio de Chirico, 1888-1979 at the Galleria Nazionale di Arte Moderna, Viale Belle Arti 131, until Jan. 3, starts with early arcadian idylls still under the influence of the German romantic view of the antique. Here are all the elements: the cutting shadows, the yearning perspectives, the monuments charged with secret meanings, the squares rep-resenting the languor of Italy's weighty past and uncertain present — the whole disturbing machinery of old romanticism transposed into a new context. The line is harsh, the colors purposely stark and bright like those of toys and popular art.

Already in the 1920s de Chirico began to change. The pull between his predilection for the past and his drive to invent new images, which was the main force behind his work so far, began to slacken; his admiration for old masters and the academic was his undoing.

He recented and, in his innumerable writings, broke faith with modernism. In recent art history only Derain made a similar turnabout.

De Chirico's brushwork became flossy, color became diluted and pinkish, and more and more versions were devoted to handed-down subject matter: views of heroes, borses and columns, in windblown valleys by the Greek sea.

Nor is it clear if de Chirico meant to make fun of old ideas and masters or just followed them. His brother Savinio, for instance, satirized European middle-class values and oldmaster conventionality much more explicitly in the same period. There are also many pol ished still lifes, quite incisive portraits and prints, and hosts of witty drawings here, but in the end too many self-pertraits in outlandish

It is true that de Chirico was barely 30 when he did the work he became internationally famous for - to live on for another 60 years of eclecticism - and that the conditions of our time make it increasingly difficult to borrow paintings from other collections, which may account for the dearth of work in the Meta-

Tomorrow's TV: Bigger Than-Life

by David Crook

HOLLYWOOD — In electronics in Japan and on the U.S. East Coast and in the studios of Hollywood, groups of video futurists are designing a new generation of television. In the rocess, they may be redirecting the future of movies, television and Twenty-first-century television, these futurists believe, will be "high-definition" or "high-resolu-tion" television, delivering magazine-like pictures and stereo sound on wall-sized CinemaScope-style screens in people's homes. Joseph Flaherty, vice president for engineering and development for the Columbia Broadcasting System is one of the chief U.S. proponents of these new systems He likes to call them "high-fidelity" television systems because he thinks the difference between the elevision of tomorrow and that of today will be as great as the difference between a modern stereo and Driving the development of high-definition television is the relization that the modern picture is not very good. In the United States, video pictures have 525 lines of resolution; like the tiny dots of a newspaper photograph, these lines are the basic elements of a television picture. The 525-line picture was sufficient 30 or 40 years ago when television was new and home screens were small.

Today, however, with 7-font screens hecoming increasingly popular, 525-line pictures are often seen as hhirry, dull and out of focus. That's not the fault of the set; it's the system.

Big-screen television "tends to amplify the faults of the picture," explains producer Glen Larson. The big screens demand pictures that look as sharp as those on small screens. The new high-defini tion systems are being designed with minimums of 1,000 lines of resolution, and some designers are thinking in terms of 2,000 or more lines of resolution. Theoretically, each additional line means greater picture clarity.

The results are astounding. Pic-tures on experimental high-definition television sets are much sharper with more vivid colors than existing sets. To some people, these new high-definition pictures are approaching the quality of film. Estimates as to the cost of home high-definition systems run about 25 percent above comparable television sets of today.

In Japan, where most of the work in high-definition technology will be solicited from visitors. But Mount Ver-non managers have decided against raising the $3 admission. "That would be counterproduc-tive," says Castellani. is taking place, futurists are ex-ploring all sorts of ways to use the new television, Takashi Fujio, deputy director of Nippon Hoso Kyo-kai (NHK, the Japan Broadcasting Corp.), is described by his col-leagues as the father of high-definition television. Next, Suzuki says, will come v deo mini-theaters, in the second half of this decade. Cable television and home-video distribution will come later.

Saturday-Sunday, December 26-27, 1981 Polish Crisis Sends Shock Waves Across W. German Bank Industry

By John M. Geddes

AP-Dow-Jones

BONN — The upheavals in Poland are sending shock waves through the West German banking industry.

The West German banks are Poland's largest creditors among Western banks, holding the equiv-alent of an estimated $4.5 billion of about $16 billion of Poland's nercial-bank deht.

The credits, the bulk of which lack guarantees by third parties, have made West German bankers valuerable to bouts of anguish.

"There isn't any sign of Christmas around here this year," one Frankfurt banker said earlier this of his bank's reaction to the military takeover in Poland. Last week, Polish authorities asked Western banks for a new $350-million credit to enable them to pay interest still due for this year. The banks have been insisting that Poland pay the interest before they will reschedule $2.4 billion of principal that came due in 1981.

Clouded Outlook

The request, and the banks' reluctance to comply, has thrown the whole issue of debt rescheduling into question. An official at one West German bank said talks may continue, on the assumption that such a rescheduling agreement could be signed, but the "chances

[Poland's ability to meet the debt repayments was further darkened by the announcement Wednesday of additional U.S. gov-ernment economic sanctions against the country. President reagan ordered suspension of fur-ther export-import bank credits to Poland and of Polish airline and fishing rights in the United States.]

That clooded ontlook has focused attention on the West German banks' ability to cope with a Polish loan default, should one occur. Squeezed by falling profits the last two years, some West German banks could be forced to take strong measures to handle the masstrong measures to handle the massive write-offs that would be re-

"No German bank is in danger of collapsing because of its Polish loans," one top aide to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said. "But if they have to write off their Polish loans," some will have to exhaust both their visible and hidden reserves and may have to tap their equity capital."

Some bankers see this official's assessment as naive. They argue that such major write-offs could shake confidence in the banking system, with unknown ramifica-tions. Moreover, some say, the government should take steps, such as favorable tax treatment, to don"t look bright for the near fu-

any loan loss. The bankers argue that the gov ernment shares some responsibility for the trouble they are in, because it supported loans to the Soviet bloc as one element of detente. Particularly grating to the banks now is a 1.2-billion-Deutsche-mark loan signed in October 1980. "Face it, we wouldn't have gone into it without the government pressure," says a West German

Lack of Guarantees

The banks also had their own reasons for lending to Poland.
West Germany is Poland's major Western trading partner. The loans helped fuel Polish trade with West Germany, giving the banks the dual advantage of earning interest on the loan and benefiting from the improved economic climate brought about by Polish purchases in Germany.

Another indication of the banks' willingness to lend is the fact that oot all of the loans outstanding to Poland are backed by government export-credit insurace. Banking sources say that of the equivalent of $4.5 billion in loans granted by about 60 West German banks, about $2.7 billion is not covered

West Germon banks ore generally unwilling to disclose their exposure on Polish loans, but industry sources give the following partial breakdown by institution for such cradits. But in mid-February, accounting concerns will complete the banks' 1981 annual reports. Under german law, the accounts must re-flect any information since the close of the year that could materially affect the balance sheets.

The dilemma for the accountants will be how to treat the Polish loans. Adding to the difficulty is the fact that there has not been a West German precedent for such treatment on an industry-wide basis, and one open question is whether or not the accounting treatment will differ from bank to

How the Polish loans are treated for tax and accounting purposes will determine how the banks' results look for the year. As one banker notes, gains could turn into losses depending on the decision, "Mid-February will be extremely important this year, more so than ever before," a Frankfurt banker says. "But if we want to be optisays. "But if we want to be optimistic, we can say there's a lot that can happen by then."

new military president has ordered a big dose of austerity with a smaller state role in the economy and, in his first major action, allowed the peso to float.

In his first speech to the nation. President Leopoldo F. Galtieri said Wednesday night that a study on the elimination of superfluous official agencies should be ready by text March and a a plan to turn state enterprises over to private enterprises would follow two months

"I demand anstere behavior and a careful administration," the 55-year-old army general said. He criticized what he called the exag-gerated needs of "a gigantic bu-reamcratic machine which does not serve the country any more and must be reduced." Gen. Galtieri, who assumed off-

On Thursday, Argentina's new economy minister, Roberto Alemann, said that the country's two-tier foreign exchange market had been scrapped and that the peso would be allowed to float. The dollar's free market rate immediately fell from Wednesday's close of 10,250 pesos to 9,500. The two-tier system was intro-duced last June by former Economy Minister Lorenzo Sigant to take selling pressure off the currency after a series of devaluations.

An offer by a new bidder would automatically extend the Jan. 7

by Marathon were illegal.

One option gave U.S. Steel the right to bny 10 million newly issued Marathon shares for $90 a share, thus making Marathon much more expensive for anyone other than U.S. Steel to buy. The second option gave U.S. Steel the right, if Mobil or anyone else won, to buy Marathon's immensely valuable Yates officied in Texas for $2.8 billion. The Yates field has $2.8 billion. The Yates field has been Mobil's principal interest in

The appeals court said the options were "manipulative," deter-ring other companies from com-peting with U.S. Steel for Marathon.

Daniel Hammer, an attorney for U.S. Steel, said Thursday his company agreed to follow the court order and drop the options before proceeding with the takeover.

Responding to the appeals court order that shareholders be allowed ta take back their stock "for a reasonable time" to permit them to accept any competing offers for Marathon, Judge Kinneary or-dered that the withdrawal date for U.S. Steel's $6.3 billion bid be moved back to midnight Jan. 6. An earlier court ruling had set the withdrawal date at five days after the appeals court ruling.

In its ruling on Mobil's $6.5 billioo bid, the appeals court said: "Mobil's reasons for the acquisi-tion ... seem to be that Marathon stock was underpriced in the mar-ket and that Marathon's valuable

Harvester Sees Profit Under New Debt Plan

CHICAGO - International Harvester, announcing completion of a refinancing agreement with 193 lenders, has said it expects a return to profitability by the end of its fiscal year Oct. 31.

Company Chairman Archie R. McCardell said Wednesday that short-term borrowing of $1.5 billion had been replaced with loans maturing in December, 1983.

Similar action has been taken with $2 billion owed by a subsidiary. IH Credit Corp., which provides credit for buyers of IH products. The subsidiary also would receive $750 million in fresh cred-

The total $4.2 billion package is thought to the largest private refinancing program ever completed, company officials said.

"All of the banks who are or have been lenders signed the agreement," chief financial officer James Cotting said, "Every bank came in for the full amount of its loan. There were no special deals." Mr. Cotting said the only exception was a New Orleans bank that is suing IH and was not expected to be part of the agreement.

Mr. McCardell, who acknowledged that the giant truck, farm equipment and construction equipment manufacturing company would have had to delcare bankruptcy without refinancing, said the company projected continued losses in early 1982, but renewed profitability later in the year. He said reductions in salaried personnel from 31,600 in 1980 to 20,000 in 1982, a white-collar wage freeze, elimination of unprofitable products, and a proposed $100-million cut in 1982 pay and bene-fits for union workers would help bring the company around.

He said he expects a United Auto Workers decision by mid-January on a proposal to reopen the current union contract.

IH has blamed its financial woes on the crippling effects of the 172-day strike in 1980 as well as the current economic downturn.

The company lost $635.7 million in its 1981 financial year and $397.9 million in 1980. Mr. McCardell said the company would have "a very substantial loss" during the three mooths to Jan, 31, the first quarter of the current year, because plants had been closed to reduce stocks.

The company expects a 10-to-15-percent drop in sales of tractors and combine harvesters during 1982, but expects to make money later in the year, he said.
Mr. McCardell also said be expects IH will use only 33 percent of its production capacity in the first quarter of 1982, against 73 percent a year earlier, but predicted the company will increase that figure to 50 percent later in the year even if the economy remains sluggish.

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES - The Civil Aeronautics Board, in a move that could slow Chairman and Chief Executive Neil G. Bergt's plan to reorganize troubled Western Airlines, says the proposed sales of Wien Air Alaska to a company owned by Mr. Bergt cannot proceed without formal CAB

Mr. Bergt had sought board acceptance of an expedited transaction in which the deal would have been closed no later than Jan. 1 for $50

BRUSSELS --- A new international textiles agreement will not adequately protect EEC producers lden, steep rises in imorts, an industry spokesman says. Camille Blum, secretary-general of the textile industry organization Comitextil, said Thursday that the protocol of a new multi-fiber arrangement agreed on in Geneva Tuesday would allow foreign producers to claim compensation if the EEC intervened to limit imports of particular products.

This compensation could take the form of higher sales of other textile goods oo the EEC market,

"There is oo real progress here.

We would be destroying other parts of the EEC textile industry,"

Mr. Blum said he feared foreign producers would make an all-out effort to fill their EEC export quo-tas next year even if it meant cutting their prices because of the depressed state of the market.

This would strengthen their gaining position when the EEC tries to negotiate more than a score of bilateral agreements based on

Mr. Blum said that if EEC demand did recover next year, the domestic textile industry would obtain little benefit while imports might rise by between 25 and 30

Japanese Extend Curbs on Exports Of Machine Tools

TOKYO — Japan will continue voluntary curbs on machine tool exports to the United States and West European countries next year, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry has said.

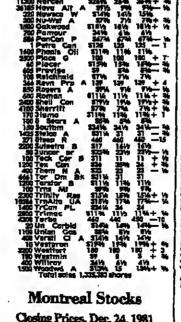

The ministry said Thursday that it will allow Japanese machine tool manufacturers to extend an export cartel agreement due to end this month for another year. The agree-

The ministry said the EEC has been asking Japan to continue the restraint in the face of a rising trade surplus with Japan estimated at a possible $18 billion for 1981. The agreement covers the 10 member countries of the EEC, as well as Austria, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland and United States. The products being curbed are numerically controlled lathes and machining tools.

The Japanese Machinery Exporters Association said latest figures show Japan exported lather and machining tools worth $193.3 million to the European countries and $381 million to the United States in the first nine months of

California Youth Faces Murder Trial

SAN JOSE, Calif. — A high school student charged with stranging a 14-year-old girl and then leading friends to look at the body has been ordered to stand trial as an adult on a charge of murder. Judge Lawrence Terry of the San Jose Juvenile Court ruled Wednesday that Anthony J. Broussard, 17, was "not a fit and proper" subject to be tried as a juvenile. The sophistication, circumstances and gravity of the offense" weighed against the youth, the judge said. Mr. Broussard was charged with strangling Marcy Courad. Police in Milpitas, Calif., said he had bragged to friends about killing and raping her and then led them into a ravine to see the body.

U.S., Japan Firms to Study China Synthetic Fuel Plant

By Jerry Knight WASHINGTON - Dynaloctron

Corp. has signed an agreement with a Japanese trading company and the Chinese government to study construction of a multi-million dollar synthetic fuels plant in

The six-month study will deter-mine whether Dynalectron's H-coal process can be used to eco-nomically convert Chinese coal into liquid fuels. Dynalectron officials said the U.S. Commerce Department has already approved of selling the synthetic fuel technology to the Chinese.

C. Itoh & Co., one of Japan's biggest multi-national trading firms, is heading a consortium of Japanese banking and business companies that are investigating production of synthetic fuels in China.

The Japanese group hopes to use the Chinese syntuels output to replace the costly imported oil upon which Japan depends for much of its energy.

try and Central Coal Mining Research Institute will provide samples of Chinese coal to be tested under Dynalectron's H-coal method for creating liquid fuels.

Earlier this week Dynalectron amounced that it's H-coal pilot plant in Catlettsburg, Ky., had completed a record 131-day run, turning 19,200 tous of coal into almost 60,000 barrels of liquid fuels. Financed by federal grants, the Financed by federal grants, the Kentucky plant uses a process de-veloped by Dynalectron's subsidiary Hydrocarbon Research Inc. and is operated by Ashland Oil. The Catlettsburg plant is being used to test the machinery and used to test the machinery and techniques under production con-ditions as the final step toward construction of a full-scale synthetic fuels plant. Dynalectron. Ashland and several other firms participating in the project have applied for federal grants to finance the full-size plant. The Reagan administration, however, is tailing of slashing government spending on synfuels or perhaps eliminating it entirely. The Japanese group, on the other hand, is beginning the first phase of studies that could lead to construction of a commercial H-coal plant in the early 1990s, Dy-nalectron officials said. The H-coal process produces a synthetic crude oil rich in naphtha unleaded gasoline — and other products that can be made into home heating oil.

On its latest and longest run, the plant used Illinois coal as a raw material. Seven other runs were completed earlier using other types of coal.

From Aug. 7, when the run began, to Dec. 11, when it was completed, the plant ran at better than 71 percent of capacity, the design-ers said. Now the plant will be shut down for two mouths to evaluate the effect of the long run on components.

The H-coal plaint it one of two such projects now operating as the first step toward commercial production of synthetic fuels. Dynalectron and Bechtel Corp., a hig California engineering furn, are designing a commercial scale plant that is correctly of moderning 50.000.

Benides studying the economic feasibility of building the complex plant in China, Dynalectron will evaluate various kinds of chinese coal to see which are best for conversion into liquid fuels.

Watt Moves to Modify U.S. Oil-Lease Policy

By Philip Shabecoff

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary James G. Watt has ordered a major refinement of his heavily criticized offshore oil and gas leasing program in an apparent effort to reduce opposition without sacri-licing significant energy potential.

In an internal memorandum is-In an internal memorandum is-sued last week, Mr. Watt directed that the leasing program focus on those offshore tracts determined by the United States Geological Survey, or by industry or state gov-ernments, to have a high potential for oil and gas development. Only those tracts would be offered for leasing.

Mr. Watt's original approach called for making nearly a billion offshore acres available for leasing over the next five years, and in huge planning areas, some the size of California.

Reduced Acreage

Under the new approach, all of the acreage will be available for industry consideration, but only specific tracts actually will be offered. The new approach, according to öne high-ranking Interior Department official, could reduce the actual acreage leased by as much as a third. The official, who asked not to be identified, said the refine-ment would enable the department to concentrate its planning, includ-ing environmental assessment, on those areas where drilling was most likely to take place.

Environmental groups and some state governments have been criti-cal of Mr. Watt's offshore leasing policies, saying the scope and pace of contemplated development of the outer continental shelf would make it impossible to safeguard the environment and economies of coastal areas adjacent to drilling operations.

The offshore program has generated political opposition and substantial litigation. A more selective approach could serve to reduce that opposition.

Sarah Chasis, a staff attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Counsel and one of the leaders of the environmentalists attacks, said that if the reports about Mr. Watt's contemplated change were true, it would be a "substantial im-

Particularly welcome, she said, would be the ability to focus environmental analysis on small areas. Also, state and local governments would have more of an opportunity to examine the consequences of the lease sale programs for their areas, she said.

In general, the refinements ordered by Mr. Watt appeared to be designed to reduce the controversy surrounding the offshore program by making the lease sales some-what more manageable.

Thursday's agreement was approved by Britain's Civil Aviation Authority and the Bank of England and will enable Laker to continue scheduled Skytrain services to New York, Los Angeles and Miami, as well as flying thousands of

Japan Extends Machine-Tool Curbs

TOKYO - Japan will continue voluntary curbs on machine tool exports to the United States and West European countries next year, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry has said.

The ministry said Thursday that it will allow Japanese machine tool manufacturers to extend an export port of the products.

The ministry said the EEC has been asking Japan to continue the restraint in the face of a rising

MUSIC OF THREE MORE SEASONS, 1977-1980 By Andrew Porter, 613 pp. $22.95.

Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 52d Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Charles Naylor

O OFTEN collections, be they of cassays, poems, or Silver Latin recipes, of the "Practical Cognitator" or Palgrave's "Golden Treasury," wind conjoins enthusiastic fools not to bawi up on the sun-porch or in the bathroom with selected junk mail and last year's magazine subscriptions. There is something wilting in the very idea of a collection or anthology for consumer and publisher alike. It is, by definition and necessity, a start-stopstart affair that importuncly demands to be considered with less chaff. This; Andrew Porter's third collection of music reviews, reprinted from The New Yorker, stands apart for start-to-stop excellence. The title Music of Three More Seasons, 1977-1980" suggests no more special impor-tance than "Jaws II," but these pieces, considered individually or together, display a commitment to scholarship and elegance of execution rarely encountered in critical writing today. Possibly the most valuable element here is the vector of choice: Porter has listened to the music that he feels is most deserving of attention, and time affirms his judgment. As New Yorker readers know, his inclination is toward opera. This is not an exclusive interest (he also favors new music), and in any case opera stands, by its complex nature, more in seed of learned discussion than, for example, the oboe repetory, but it is Porter's passion and accordingly he gives music drama more than democracy would allow.

Music More Accessible to Public Were the years 1977 to 1980 significantly richer musically than any other given period? Probably not, although television brought a greater number of concerts and operas into U.S. homes than before. These three seasons featured the complete Berg's "Lulu," a hanting and elich mass-distributed haunting and slick mass-distributed film of "Don Giovanni," the publication of the "New Grove Dictionary of Music," the acceptance generally of Mozart's "Clemenza di Tito" (or "Titus") as a Great Work, More people listened to Tippett, Janacek, and Britten; they sampled unfamiliar Donizetti, the early isms of Malgoire, Ponnelle's provocative Wagner, and more early Verdi. They gasped at the ages of certain elderly pianists and welcomed the young, new piano com-petition winners. They visited Cara-moor and the United States' own Spoleto (in Charleston, S. C.) — and, I am tempted to add, "they found them wanting." Porter did. And he tells

To leap gracefully from an audience's inchoate sense that something just doesn't work, to the crack critic's articulated horror at the state of the art is a passage which sadly, we in the United States, too rarely experience in the press, but Andrew Porter com-mands that skill and he is a born reformer. His music-historical erudition has for many years now (eight in The New Yorker) helped to cultivate among his readers a more nearly uto-pian community of audiences and professionals. He exhorts us not to tap time, cough, or blow our collective nose during the music; asks managements to provide good texts and adequate light to read them by — and washington Post.

Charles Naylor, co-author (with Thomas M. Disch) of the novel "Neighboring Lives," wrote this review for The Washington Post.

out their appreciation during planissimo passages, suggests that cello and piano duos not sit in such a way that their eyes are prevented from meet-ing; observes that the presence of a cafe or buffet for intermission "cheer" is just as essential as are places near the theater where people can talk after the concert is over. Among less pedestrian imperatives he recommends that major operas, such as "Don Carlos" (because it was written in French) ought sometimes to be produced in the correct language, while unfamiliar, densely plotted barroque works for the stage should be offered in the language of the listeners.

Fluid Critique

Singers and other performers have good nights and bad, and Porter seems ever to be fluid and just, according to the essential quality of the fare. Riccardo Muti's conducting one night is "exquisite but cold, as [his] Verdi often is," while nearly a year later he "scems to be the only conductor both able and willing to do pieces like "Guillaume Tell" and "Les Vepres Siciliennes" unabridged." Beverly Sills "Thais" falls under attack in 1978: "a mistake to essay it without a herome more alluring of voice and more secure on exposed, sustained high notes above the staff." Ten months later, referring to the Met "Don Pasquale," we read: "Beverly Sills portrayal of the heroine was especially distressing" but a year later, at her farewell performance, she is the "incandescent heroine" of "La Loca." Not oddly, in that same review Porter cites "La Loca" as "perhaps Menoth's best opera," while that composer fares poorly elsewhere: His "Trial of the Gypsy" is "trashy music, and oot even tuneful or tearjerking, the way that "Amahl" is." And Barber's "Vanessa" "Amahl" is." And Barber's "Vanessa" has "a slightly less awful libretto than it seems." (Menotti wrote it.) Whom does he praise? To list a few, Peter Pears, Radu Lupu, Sarah Caldwell, Dame Janet Baker, Marianna Christos, Alfred Brendel, Elisabeth Soderstrom, Youri Egorov, among others. Bernard Haitink is "not just a thoroughly sound and satisfying conductor but a great one." Fischer-Dieskau "sang [Schubert's Winterreise] almost as if he were drunk -- drunk, that is, both with rapturous contemplation of the great cycle and with the grief that has stolen from it into his soni."

LOS ANGELES — People laughed when I said I is planning to write about Alex Johnson, who, beuse he has been out of the major leagues for five ars, is eligible for baseball's Hall of Fame this year. Johnson in the Hall of Fame? Good for a chuckle especially when you consider that the voters are ortswriters. Johnson once complimented a Los Andes writer by setting him in the context of his colegues: "You're the least ignorant..."
So Johnson probably won't be swept into the hall the first ballot along with Henry Aaron and Frank obinson. But every year at this time, writers and ms launch campaigns for their favorites, and my an this year was known as The Ax. Awful Alex and lex the Angry.

1 know, I know — he only won one batting title, in 170, when he was with the California Angels. And he canced around eight teams in his 13-year hig-league meer (.288 lifetime average). But Johnson was a pioeer, an innovator and one strange dude.

So listen up. Johnson belongs in the Hall of Fame.

Applied scientific research to baseball. "There's

 But eventually nature is going to take over. Your · Applied logic to baseball. Since the umpires were ut to get him, he rarely ran out grounders. "Why run then I knew I was going to be called out anyway?"

Simplified the interpretation of statistics. At one Il-Star Game, a writer noted that Johnson had hit aly two homers the previous season, but already had 2 at the present All-Star break, "What's the differace?" the man asked. "Ten," replied Johnson.

 Visiting a home for retarded children.

That last photo is the one that bothers me and keeps this from being nothing but a collection of an-ecdotes about a malcontent. See, Johnson apparently had some heavy emotional problems. Off the field, they say, he was a nice fellow.

He made that visit to the retarded kids, for instance. One of those token, five-minutes-and-10-auto-graphs jobs so common among pro athletes. But when the woman who ran the home went into the backyard an hour later, there was Johnson playing ball with the kids. He did a lot of that kind of thing.

He contributed $500 to help a crippled former teammate, but, when asked about the donation, vehe-

But once Johnson put on the uniform, he became Mr. Hyde. He intimidated teammates, writers, managers, umpires. Everybody.

When the Angels traded Johnson to Cleveland, his new manager told reporters that Johnson was working harder in spring training than anybody on the team. "How would be know?" Johnson remarked.

"Maybe I'm just decoying."

Johnson's story is a sad one. He had enormous talent. He had speed and power and he worked like crazy on his hitting.

He would play pepper for hours. He would get in the batting cage against the pitching machine, having cranked it up to its fastest setting. He'd start at the plate and then begin creeping up on the machine. In a few minutes he would be standing 15 feet in front of it, still lashing lashing line drives.

The year after he won the batting title, the Angels suspended Johnson without pay for failing to give his best effort. He appealed and won a landmark decision. The ruling was that, in terms of suspensions and salaries, an emotional illness should be treated the same as a physical one.

It was pretty much Johnson against everybody, but Johnson wasn't always the bad guy.

Sportswriters betrayed his trust and one newspaper cartoonist portrayed him in a blatantly racist fashion. When things went bad, teammates used him as a handy scapegoat.

But Johnson had serious problems. He was a black man who liked few whites, fewer anthonity figures and nobody he considered to be ignorant — which narrowed his circle of friends considerably. He hit 268 for Detroit in 1976, at the age of 33.

Then, nine days after his birthday and nine days before Christmas, the Tigers released him. He's 39 now, wherever he is; I couldn't locate him. There are reports that he played ball in Mexico for a while and then went home to Detroit to run a couple

Lakers Get McAdoo, the NBA's Well-Traveled Mystery Man

By Randy Harvey Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES - Once mentioned in the same category with Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Bill Wal-ton, Artis Gilmore and Bob Lanier as one of the National Basketball Association's great centers. Bob McAdoo, 30 years old and an on-again, off-again performer for the last season and a half, is starting over with the Los Angeles Lakers.

After more than a month of netiations with the New Jersey Nets, the Lakers reached an agreement early Thursday for the rights to McAdoo. Los Angeles gave up its 1983 second-round draft choice and cash reportedly amounting to $100,000 this season and another $50,000 if McAdoo is still with the team next year.

The deal is contingent on the often-injured McAdoo's passing a physical exam. He played only 16 games last season and in May had surgery for bone spurs in his heels. If Laker doctors give him a clean bill of health, he will join the team Sunday night for a game against

The Lakers can use him. Abdul-Jabbar, who has missed three games with a sprained ankle, is still at less than full strength. And Mitch Kupchak, the power for-ward who has been Abdul-Jabber's backup at center, is out for at least two months with a broken bone in

McAdoo's will be a multiyear contract, but only the remainder of this season is guaranteed. Each side has an option to reconstruct the arrangement before next sea-son. According to team sources, he will receive $175,000 this season, considerably less than the $522,500 he earned last year with New Jersey.

The Nets, who claimed McAdoo for the final 10 games of last season after Detroit waived him, offered him $300,000 to return this year; McAdoo, a free agent, asked for $400,000. But his agent, Bill a factor as McAdoo's desire to play for a winner.

Thus ended, at least for the moment, the Lakers' search by for a backup center, one that began before the season and intensified when Kupchak was injured last weekend. Only time will tell if McAdoo is the player the Lakers have been looking for. His unorthodox hut deadly jump shot, his "in-your-face" shot-blocking and running ability could make him a fixture in the Lakers "show-time" style of the time" style of play.

Originally Los Angeles was looking for a sturdier center, but when Kupchak was hart the prioriwhen Rupcian was nort the priority became a center who also can play forward. The 6-9, 210-pound McAdoo has played both positions. And well.

If he is still as good as his credentials, the Lakers have not added a star, but a galaxy — rookie of the year in 1973, NBA scoring champion in 1974; 1975, 1976, most valuable player in 1975 and a two-time all-star.

In nine seasons, McAdoo has averaged 26.4 points a game on a shooting percentage of 50.6, and 11.6 rebounds. But, in his 10th season, the Lakers are his sixth team -an early-warning signal.

The reviews are mixed. He has been called shy and egocentric. Team-oriented but selfish. A man who plays hurt and a malingerer who sometimes doesn't play healthy. Coachable, Uocoachable,

Said New York Knick General Manger Eddie Donovan last sum-mer: "He did everything we asked of him. He may not be the greatest passer in the world, but he will al-ways get you X number of points and X number of rebounds. Some people say he's a selfish player, but I think all great scorers have to be a little selfish."

But Boston General Manager Red Anerbach said McAdoo "was more concerned with personal achievements than team achievements."

Oregon Is Given 2-Year Penalty for Multiple Violations

The NCAA said late Wednesday

The NCAA also said the football program set up a secret travel account in which unused airline tickets were refunded and the money was used for recruiting expenses. The football program was found to have offered improper re-cruiting inducements, to have giv-en athletes illegal extra benefits and to have fielded ineligible play-ers in 1977-78 and 1979-80. The basketball program was cited for allowing former members of the coaching staff to recruit athletes.

A spokesman said the university will not appeal the penalties.

Covering CIA Losses

WASHINGTON — One of the Made-in-India welcome mat in things the CIA does is run Pakistan?" secret husinesses known as proprietaries, to provide covers for agents to "wash" money for covert operations and for other clandesine operations. Up until recently, these businesses have been very successful, hur lately many of them have been losing mon-ey. So "The Com-pany" decided to everyooe back to Langley, Va., to see what Was going wrong.

The director of covert business operations was in Buchwald a foul temper.

He addressed the CIA agents who were charged with running the husiness covers. "This is the worst year we've ever had. Our gross sales are down by 20 percent, and the CIA can no longer eat your losses. Now what the hell is going on?"

The agent, whose cover was president of the Deutschland Music Box Company, said, "It's the the Hong Kong station. They stole our designs and flooded the U.S. market with cheap imitations. 1 make the best music boxes in the world, but I can't compete on

"Isn't that tough?" said the agent from Hong Kong whose cover was chairman of the Kowloon Toy Company. "If you can't compete, then get out of the music box business. I'm oot making a dime oo my boxes ever since the Taiwan CIA company started to undercut us."

The director said. "Why does everyone have to make music boxes? Can't you come up with a new product like the Barbie doll?"

The agent running the South Korean Novelty Company said, "We put out a Nancy and Ronnie for Cbristmas and it bombed.

The director looked over his computer printouts. "What hap-pened to you, Danfield? It says bere your New Delhi Exporting Company dropped $2 million in the last quarter.

"That wasn't my fault, I sent a millioo madras welcome mats through Donnegger's shipping company in Bombay, and his peo-ple unloaded them in Pakistan. Anyone bere ever try to sell a Donnegger said, "Your company got the invoices all screwed up. You had the yak hutter going to the United States and the welcome mats going to Pakistan."

"Oh, shut up," the director said.
"Let's get to you, Brinkley. How do you explain the fact you still have 200,000 Lapland ski boots in your warehouse in Helsinki?"
"I had an order from Harrods in London for the whole lot, when the KGB's Finlandia Sporting Goods Company got wind of it, and made Harrods an offer they couldn't refuse. I've asked covert operations to hurn down the Finlandia factory three times, but they keep ignoring my request. How can I run a clandestine husiness if our people won't get tough with the competiooo? The director said, "I'll talk to the arson people later. Now we get to Biberman. I have a report that you used CIA covert funds to cover up your losses from the Mediterranean Fruit Fly Company."

"I'm suing Jerry Brown and the state of California. As soon as I win the case, I'll replace the money. I can prove every fruit fly we sent them was sterile."

The director said, "Biberman, you wouldn't know a sterile fruit this readout the only one who made a profit this year for The Company was Tablestone. Let him tell the rest of you dunder-heads how he did it."

"He isn't here, sir. He resigned last mooth and went into business for himself "

What kind of husiness?" "Selling submachine guos, bombs and poison gas canisters to the Lihyans. He said that as far as husiness was concerned the CIA didn't offer him a future, and he'd rather strike out on his own."

"Where is be getting his stuff?" "The same people we get it from, sir." "Do you mean he is telling people he is still working for the "No, just the opposite. He keeps telling them he isn't. But the more be insists he has nothing to do with us, the more our suppliers believe he does. The director said, "You have to hand it to Tablestone. He always had a talent for making a buck. wish I had 100 more like him." O 1981, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Jan Kerouac: On Her Own Road

By Ann Japenga

Los Angeles Times Service

OS ANGELES — In a drafty

Manhattan loft in 1951. Jack Kerouac threaded hutcher paper through a typewriter and began a tale about "an ex-cow-hand and an ex-foothaller driving across the continent looking for lost fathers, odd jobs, good times and girls."

While Kerouae hatched the story that was to become "On the Road," a novel that inspired a generation of questers and seekers, he was aware that something else was gestating in the loft. His wife, Joan, was pregnant with what would be his only "In the back of his mind he knew that I was there," said Kerouac's daughter, Jan. "That sort of worried him because the book was his haby." Before Jan was born, Kerouac split. He set out to collect the characters and adventures that were to fill 19 books chronicling the "Beat generation."

And, at 15, his daughter, pregnant and on probation, ran away from her mother's house in the Lower East Side slums of New York and embarked on a fevered, sometimes seamy, trip of ber

It was only after Jan Kerouac wrote the autobiographical novel "Baby Driver: A Story About Myself' that she saw how much she and her father were alike. They may never have lived together like most fathers and daughters, but they were both bound to the road.

Limousine and $4

Jan Kerouac dressed up in a white skirt and flowered blouse for the flight to Los Angeles from her bome in Ellensburg, a farming community in central Washington state. A limousine, courtesy of her publisher, picked her up at the airport and escorted her to her interview. She had $4 in her purse.

When a photographer suggest-ed downtown Skid Row as a backdrop for some shots, she agreed readily. "I'm just a burn in disguise," she said.

The jobs she has taken in her 29 years include maid, racetrack groom, cook, waitress, janitor, masseuse, potato picker, cannery worker and cartographer's assist-ant. Most recently she supported herself washing dishes, a job she Mexican tropics, Later, crisscrossing the U.S. Southwest in an old Cadillac with an assorthad to give up to have time to publicize the book. ment of friends, madmen and lovers, she records days of scor-

For many years she resisted any suggestions that she should try writing as a means of paying the rent. "When I was a child, people were always saying, Why don't you write? Your father writes.

"I didn't know how to react. I didn't quite understand what it meant to have that name, Kerouse. I pieced together that it was usually the interesting people that recognized it."

It wasn't until 1973, when she returned from an eventful sojourn in Central America and friends kept asking, "What hap-pened?" that Kerouac decided to put it all on paper: her travels, her tumultuous childhood.

In 1979, the publisher Viking-Penguin invited Jan Kerouac to attend a San Francisco gathering on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of her father's death. Among the Beat writers, cultists and fans she met there was the agent who eventually would sell her book.

With its freewheeling prose, "Baby Driver" will inevitably be compared to the work of her fa-ther. But the styles are very dif-ferent, Jan Kerouac said. While her father reacted emotionally to every rainstorm and train ride, ber writing is cool and objective. "Baby Driver" opens with Jan. at 15, enduring a painful still-birth in a thatched but in the ing heroin, turning tricks for gas-oline money, rushing down through Central America. The events tumble together without interpretation or reaction, leaving the reader exhausted, and amazed that she survived. She met her father for the first time at age 9 and a half. She had her hair curled for the big event and spent the morning worrying whether "the famous wino"

would like her. The occasioo was a blood test to determine Jan's paternity. Her mother, she said, was portrayed in several biographies as being "a demon in the background, fol-lowing Jack around with warrants to get support for me. She didn't mean him any harm. But she was waiting on tables to sup-port three kids" (two from a later marriage). Jack was probably just as apprehensive about the meeting, since he had always insisted to his mother that Jan wasn't his.

The blood tests indicated otherwise. Jan said that her father later commented to Allen Ginsberg, with a mixture of pride and panic: "She sure does look like me, doesn't she?"

In her mind, there was no donbt. She liked her father immediately and was charmed bythe way he shuffled along with his lower lip jutting out — just like hers did.

For one precious afternoon, he was hers to show off to the neighborhood kids — oot for his celebrity hut because he was really her father. He left with a curt, "See ya in January."

The support checks came regu-larly — $52 a month — hut she didn't see her father again until six years later, a reunion she de-scribes in "Baby Driver": "My father sat in a rocking chair about one foot from the TV, upending a fifth of whisky and wearing a blue plaid shirt. He was watching 'The Beverly Hillbillies."

He wanted to speed through ife, an outlaw poet (Ginsberg called him "the angel-headed hipster"), speaking for everyone alienated by postwar affluence. But he also wanted a home and stability.

Her mother told Jan that Jack woke one morning at 5 and begged his wife in a whiny voice: "Make me a spice cake." His mother would have done it, be said. When the marriage ended Jack returned to live with his mother between travels, an arrangement he maintained into his mid-'40s.

A Cozy Room

"He needed to have this womblike atmosphere to work in," Jan said. "A small cozy room with his mother nearby to minister to his needs.

"I'm beginning to understand that. I prefer to have a small space to work in too." Jan Kerouac recently switched workrooms in the apartment she shares with her musician boyfriend. He took the larger room for his electric piano, she took the small one to write in.

In October, 1969, Jan heard on the radio that her father had died of complications resulting from alcoholism. She had to give up a fantasy she had murtured since she was young - that someday they would be "drinking bud-

These days she is thinking about buying some land with a house on it, writing more, maybe having a child. "I don't want to be traveling aimlessly anymore." But in the next breath she said she'd like to go to France and look up her ancestors in Brittany.

Two brothers in Atlanta have come up with a new twist for the frustrated folks who can't solve Erno Rubik's mind bender. Their variation is called "The Other Cube" — and it's all one color. "This is a 'pet rock' type of idea," said Henry Dan, a computer sales man who came up with it. "It's for the frustrated cubist to relieve his frustrations." With the help of his older brother, Bruce, a physician and writer, Dan purchased regular cubes, peeled off their colors and remade them; all white, all green, all red, etc. They sold like, well, Rubik's cube. "We can't make them fast enough," he said. Thus far, green has proved to be the most popular color, with red a close second.

Anna Moffa, fresh from a tour of. "Tosca" in seven Italian cities, visited the Palazzo Farnese in Rome, scene of Tosca's confrontation with Baron Scarpia that results in his death. She summed up the op-era: "Any Tosca in ber right mind would have flipped over Scarpia; who according to the play's cre-ator, Victorien Sardon, was hand-some, rich, a baron and the head of the Roman secret police. Instead she fell madly in love with some silly painter and ended up in big trouble."
